Abstract: With the development of urbanization and the ageing population, the improvement of the urban environment and the quality of life (QOL) of the elderly in cities with a cold climate have become critical issues to be addressed. However, only a few studies have focused on this aspect. According to a review of the literature, the contents of the built environment (BE) in severe cold regions are defined as thirteen key factors of four categories (density, environmental aesthetics, outdoor environment, and accessibility) and the QOL of old people consists of three aspects (residential, health, and social satisfaction). This study explores how BE variables are associated with the QOL of older adults by using ordered logit and gologit2 models. The data consist of the results of 1945 questionnaires from field surveys in 11 different residential areas, across two cities in northeastern China. The results show: (1) Walkability in winter, distance to a public park of 400–1000 m, outdoor shelters and seating, less than five buses available, and a mixture of evergreen and deciduous trees are five of the most important variables of BE that have a significant positive impact on QOL compared with other climatic regions; (2) “Pocket parks” and pedestrian walkway safety are appropriate approaches to improve wellbeing under local economic conditions. For public transportation, metro and rail transit systems are encouraged, and some rules are needed to reduce the number of buses in harsh weather conditions; (3) Compared with spatial distribution in other climates, the scope of a 15 min city should be less than 1 km in severe cold areas. From the findings, we conclude that there are six possible pattern languages to improve the urban environment, and they can provide information for further study on environmental planning in severe cold regions.

1. Introduction

Over the past few years, as the economy has increased, urban space and the life expectancy of the elderly have been growing. According to the UN data, the proportion of old people over 65 reached 1 in 7 of the global population in 2019, and will reach 1 in 6 by 2050 [1]. For most developing countries, there is a general lack of sustainable strategies for regional sustainability [2], which causes the unrestrained use of resources; the main consequence of a crowded city [3]. The living environment demanded by the urban elderly is facing increasingly serious challenges. Moreover, the availability of outdoor environment is becoming more limited in cities due to the impact of different national prevention and control measures, which significantly reduced well-being and quality of life (QOL) during the coronavirus (COVID-19) pandemic [4,5]. A 15 min city is frequently presented as an optimal strategy in this situation. Additionally, as a method that can be easily used, pattern language is utilized to improve towns and neighbourhoods. Like the network of language, the sequence of patterns is not only a summary of language, but also an index to the Environmental Case Studies, Northeastern Region Dorothy B. Rosenthal, 1996-02-02 Regional Environmental Politics in Northeast Asia Jeongwon Bourdais Park, 2018-11-12 The share of global CO₂ emissions from the core Northeast Asian NEA countries in 2015 was estimated to be as high as 33.63 percent. Representing 28.21, 3.67 and 1.75 percent of total global emissions, China, Japan and South Korea were ranked the first, fifth and seventh largest contributors respectively. Some parts of China, the Republic of Mongolia, the Russian Far East and Southeast Asia have long been on serious alert due to accelerated deforestation. With their rapid population growth and economic development, the core countries of Northeast Asia are responsible both directly and indirectly for numerous environmental problems. Urgent individual and collective action is required from the region's governments. Against the backdrop of debate on how to understand Northeast Asia as a region, Park focuses on the major regional economies of China, Japan and South Korea along with Russia, North Korea and the Republic of Mongolia due to both their geopolitical proximity and their significance to the region. The author attempts to answer the questions: How far has regional environmental cooperation progressed in Northeast Asia and Why are Northeast Asian countries reluctant to cooperate further on urgent transboundary and regional environmental issues.

Agriculture and a Changing Environment in Northeastern India Sumi Krishna, 2020-11-29 India's northeastern region, forged by a unique geological history and peopled by several waves of migration, is extraordinarily complex. Farming systems in the hills and the riverine plains are embedded in a heterogeneous environment comprising forests, wetlands and fields shaped over centuries by nature and people. Today, the environment and economy are undergoing rapid transformation, affecting people's lives, livelihoods and methods of food production. The essays in this volume bring a multi-disciplinary perspective to critical aspects of the process of agricultural change, examine the gender dimensions of agriculture and explore initiatives for sustainable livelihood and ecological conservation. Part I analyses the impact of policies and people's own aspirations on the closely intertwined ecology and economy of the region. Part II discusses the gender dynamics of farming, forestry and biodiversity in a socio-cultural context where women are primarily responsible for food production. Part III highlights some alternative farming interventions and community-based efforts for environmental conservation, sustainable resource management and improved livelihoods. This book will be useful to scholars and students of agriculture, economics, development, environment and gender studies and to those involved in policy analysis, natural resource management and community organisation, as also general readers interested in India's northeastern region.
