are not necessarily regarded as progressive in an environmental sense. Such claims are often the most representative. It is also vital that the claims are related to a company's core business level within the company, since in any corporate structure the board of directors often generates policy in environmental management policy. Most of the studies cited above have addressed all these aspects comprehensively.

2.2 This project

The project was initiated in January 1991, in order to fill gaps in understanding about the attitudes of European business. The project has sought to learn more about the complex process of change by surveying strategic environmental trends among major European corporations. Environmental issues are causing rapid changes in Europe, partly because of Europe's diverse political, economic and social structure and partly because of its relatively long industrial history. The project has investigated the environmental views of European business, to make them available to other companies and governmental bodies.

The project has looked at five European countries, and at responses from within five industrial sectors. The countries included those whose industrial
