Enlisted Personnel Trends in the Selected Reserve, 1986-1994 Richard J. Buddin, Sheila Nataraj Kirby, 1996 Since Operation Desert Storm Shield reserve forces have been drawing down Nevertheless fiscal constraints are placing a high priority on using reserve forces wherever they can meet deployment dates and readiness criteria Reserve forces are expected to play an important role in responding to regional crises as well as in peacekeeping peace enforcement and humanitarian assistance operations These roles and missions combined with the downsizing of both the active and reserve forces make it critical that the reserve be able to meet the manpower and readiness requirements called for in our national military strategy This report focuses on the Selected Reserve enlisted force and its changing profile set against the context of the military drawdown In particular it examines changes from FY89 through FY94 pointing to some potential areas of concern with respect to reserve manning in the future Trends in the Enlisted Reserve, 1996 The Effect of Mobilization on

Reserve, 1996 The call up of over 240 000 reservists for the Persian Gulf War marked the largest mobilization of the reserves since the Korean War Although largely successful the call up spawned a number of concerns First some units had to delay deployment because of low levels of skill qualification Some senior officials noting these readiness problems worry about the ability of the reserves to attract sufficient numbers of experienced personnel That concern is reflected in a congressional direction to the Army National Guard to boost the number of prior service personnel in its ranks Another concern is that such a large call up could cause recruiting problems or foster a mass exodus The drawdown of active and reserve forces has served only to intensify these worries National Defense Research Institute researchers Richard Buddin and Sheila Kirby address these and other concerns in Enlisted Personnel Trends in the Selected Reserve 1986 1994

Enlisted Personnel Trends in the Selected Reserve, 1986-1996 ,1994 This report presents the results of a study examining personnel readiness of the Selected Reserve Components from FY86 FY94 It describes the data technical analyses and findings in detail and will serve as a reference source for future work in this area The current study updates and extends the earlier analysis in a number of important ways First the data examined are more recent through FY94 and reflect the early effects of both the active and the reserve drawdown second analyses of the large cohorts recently separated from active duty point to the success of the Reserve Components in recruiting from this prior service pool third fears that Operation Desert Storm might lead to a huge outflow from the reserves can largely be laid to rest as the analysis of attrition shows Indeed the study reveals that the Reserve Components have been remarkably successful in keeping quality high attracting and retaining prior service personnel improving skill match rates at entry and keeping attrition and skill qualification rates fairly stable
