Research Council,Committee on Environmental Epidemiology,1997-07-26 Determining the health risks to humans of exposure to toxic substances in the environment is made difficult by problems such as measuring the degree to which people have been exposed and determining causation whether observed health effects are due to exposure to a suspected toxicant Building on the well received first volume Environmental Epidemiology Hazardous Wastes and Public Health this second volume continues the examination of ways to address these difficulties It describes effective epidemiological methods for analyzing data and focuses on errors that may occur in the course of analyses The book also investigates the utility of the gray literature in helping to identify the often elusive causative agent behind reported health effects Although gray literature studies are often based on a study group that is quite small use inadequate measures of exposure and are not published many of the reports from about 20 states that were examined by the committee were judged to be publishable with some additional work The committee makes recommendations to improve the utility of the gray literature by enhancing quality and availability Environmental Health for All David J. assessment of environmental hazards and related risks is a primary prerequisite for effective environmental health protection at both the individual and collective level National and regional policies on environmental health need to be guided by knowledge about the risks to the populations involved as the Environmental Action Plan for Europe notes priority setting requires the comparative assessment of risks to health of different environmental factors against the cost of controlling them In recent years this has assumed particular importance for with the encouragement of the World Health Organisation WHO all countries in Europe are committed to producing National Environmental Health Action Plans NEHAPs which will define priorities and targets for environmental health and the actions needed to achieve them Reliable information on risks is clearly fundamental to this process Individual risk assessment is no less important in this context Much of the responsibility and capacity to improve public health lies ultimately in the choices e g about diet smoking alcohol consumption sexual activities sporting activities travel mode place of residence and occupation which we make as individuals If we are to improve and protect our own health therefore and in so doing play our personal role in achieving the targets set by these Plans we need to be guided by a clear understanding of the risks involved

Crawford-Brown,2012-12-06 Scientists and regulators have struggled to define the role of theory experiments models and common sense in risk analysis This situation has been made worse by the isolation of theory from modeling of experimentation from theory and of practical action from basic science This book arises from efforts at regulatory agencies and industries to bring more science into health risk analysis so that society may better use limited resources to improve public health This book covers the characterization of exposure to pollutants and other sources of risk the movement of pollutants into the body via inhalation ingestion dermal absorption and exposures to radiation the movement of a pollutant as it cascades through the tissues and organs of the body and the development of principles and models for dose response modeling The book shows how an understanding of the biological chemical and physical properties of the environment and of the human body can guide the selection of mathematical models and how these models can aid in estimating risks Included in the book are models covering the full range of topics in human health risk analysis exposure assessment rates of intake deposition and uptake by organs absorption across membranes biokinetics dosimetry and dose response The reader will gain from the book a better understanding of how environmental health science as applied in risk analysis can be used to create a more rational basis for the improvement of public health
