Global Climate Policy Urs Luterbacher, Detlef F. Sprinz, 2018-08-14 Analyses of the international climate change regime consider the challenges of maintaining current structures and the possibilities for creating new forms of international cooperation The current international climate change regime has a long history and it is likely that its evolution will continue despite such recent setbacks as the decision by President Donald Trump to withdraw the United States from the Paris Agreement of 2015. Indeed the U S withdrawal may spur efforts by other members of the international community to strengthen the Paris accord on their own. This volume offers an original contribution to the study of the international political context of climate change over the last three decades with fresh analyses of the current international climate change regime that consider both the challenges of maintaining current structures and the possibilities for creating new forms of international cooperation. The contributors are leading experts with both academic and policy experience; some are advisors to governments and the Climate Secretariat itself. Their contributions combine substantive evidence with methodological rigor. They discuss such topics as the evolution of the architecture of the climate change regime; different theoretical perspectives; game theoretical and computer simulation approaches to modeling outcomes and assessing agreements; coordination with other legal regimes; non state actors; developing and emerging countries; implementation, compliance and effectiveness of agreements; and the challenges of climate change mitigation after the Paris Agreement. Gutner, 2002-08-16 Multilateral development banks

MDBs are increasingly expected to address environmental issues in their economic development lending Yet the banks have been accused of failing to implement their own environmental policies thereby contributing to environmental degradation in borrowing countries In this book Tamar Gutner analyzes the environmental policies of three MDBs the World Bank the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the European Investment Bank She compares their performance in Central and Eastern Europe where the need for economic and environmental reform has been particularly urgent and where these MDBs are among the largest donors Gutner finds many obstacles to efforts to green the three banks most notably a mismatch between the environmental mandates and existing patterns of institutional design and incentives The depth and scope of the banks green activities reflect the degree of shareholder commitment to environmental issues and how demand driven the MDB is designed to be Surprisingly the World Bank the most scrutinized and criticized of the three MDBs has been rather more responsive than its counterparts to its environmental mandate in the region The discussion is framed by larger explorations of the behavior of international organizations and the sources of their innovation and inertia in addressing new policy issues Gutner demonstrates the need to examine the impact of different stages of the policy process on new mandates and to incorporate both political and institutional variables when developing theories about the behavior of international institutions
