Economic Analysis Of An Urban Housing Market:

Economic Analysis of an Urban Housing Market John F. McDonald, 1979 Economic Analysis of Urban Housing Markets Bryan Ellickson, Barry Fishman, Peter A. Morrison, Rand Corporation, 1977 Residential Real Estate Anupam Nanda, 2019-03-20

Residential Real Estate introduces readers to the economic fundamentals and emerging issues in housing markets. The book investigates housing market issues within local, regional, national, and international contexts in order to provide students with an understanding of the economic principles that underpin residential property markets. Key topics covered include Location choice in urban areas, Housing supply and demand, Housing finance and housing as an asset class, Demographic shifts and implications for housing, Sustainable homes and digitalisation in housing, Drawing on market level information, readers are encouraged to recognise the supply and demand drivers and modelling of dynamic housing markets at various spatial scales and the implications of trends within an urban and regional context e.g. urbanisation, ageing, population migration, digitalisation. With research-based discussions and coverage of relevant literature, this is an ideal textbook for students of residential real estate, property, and related business studies courses at UG and PG levels, as well as a reference book with research topics for researchers. This book will also be of interest to professionals and policymakers.

The Maze of Urban Housing Markets Jerome Rothenberg, 1991-11-15

This powerful new theoretical approach to analyzing urban housing problems and the policies designed to rectify them will be a vital resource for urban planners, developers, policymakers, and economists. The search for the roots of serious urban housing problems such as homelessness, abandonment, rent burdens, slums, and gentrification has traditionally focused on the poorest sector of the housing market. The findings set forth in this volume show that the roots of such problems lie in the relationships among different parts of the market, not solely within the lower quality portion, though that is where problems are most dramatically manifested, and housing reforms are myopically focused. The authors propose a new understanding of the market structure characterized by a closely interrelated array of quality submarkets. Their comprehensive models ground a unified theory that accounts for demand by both renters and owner occupants, supply by owners of existing dwellings, changes in the stock of housing due to conversions and new construction, and interactions across submarkets.

Modelling Spatial Housing Markets Geoffrey Meen, 2012-12-06

Spatial fixity is one of the characteristics that distinguishes housing from most other goods and services in the economy. In general, housing cannot be moved from one part of the country to another in response to shortages or excesses in particular areas. The modelling of housing markets and the interlinkages between markets at different spatial levels, international, national, regional, and urban, are the main themes of this book. A second major theme is disaggregation, not only in terms of space but also between households. The book argues that aggregate time series models of housing markets of the type widely used in Britain and also in other countries in the past have become less relevant in a world of increasing income dispersion. Typically, aggregate relationships will break down except under special conditions. We can no longer assume that traditional location or tenure patterns for example will continue in the future The book has four main components First it discusses trends in housing markets both internationally and within nations Second the book develops theoretical housing models at each spatial scale starting with national models moving down to the regional level and then to urban models Third the book provides empirical estimates of the models and finally the models are used for policy analysis Analysis ranges over a wide variety of topics including explanations for differing international house price trends the causes of housing cycles the role of credit markets regional housing market interactions and the role of housing in urban suburban population drift

The Economics of Urban Property Markets Paschalis Arvanitidis, 2014-08-13 This book examines the relationship between the property market and urban economy The stimulus for this work was provided by the seemingly ever accelerating process of urban economic change and the noticeable failure of existing studies to adequately explore the pivotal role that the property market plays in this process Drawing on institutional economics the central argument of the book is that the property market as an institution is a mediator through which urban economic potential can be realised and served In developing this argument the book provides a critical realist ontological framework that advances understanding of the institutional structure of the economy and the complex interrelation between the institutional environment and human agency as well as a holistic theoretical framework of urban economic change where appropriate emphasis is placed on the specific mechanisms processes and dynamics through which the built environment is provided Arvanitidis also explores an institutional conceptualisation of property market efficiency defined in terms of the ability of the market institution to adapt its structure and to provide outcomes that the economy requires To inform empirical research on the developed concepts the book also offers a generic analytical approach specifying appropriate research methods and techniques for investigation along with a specific research design providing an operational framework that translates developed theory into empirical practice The book's primary contribution therefore lies in its delineation of a holistic research programme to conceptualise the property market as an institution and to explore its role within the urban economy

Urban Housing Markets Larry S. Bourne, John R. Hitchcock, 1978-12-15 The Conference on Urban Housing Markets sponsored by the Centre for Urban and Community Studies in October 1977 was the first major conference on housing to be held in Canada since the First Canadian Housing Conference sponsored by the Canadian Welfare Council in 1968 This volume is at once a record of the Conference and a review of important recent research on urban housing markets and related public policy issues The book captures the flavor of a lively debate between academics and policy analysts and the commentaries and discussion sections provide in non technical language a statement of some major questions confronting government policy on housing In addition to its use as a record of an important Canadian conference the book is a valuable collection of recent housing research The ten papers cover a wide variety of topics ranging from conceptual and methodological issues on the one hand to critiques of Canadian housing policies on the other They indicate the range of issues which must be taken into account in assessing housing policy Taken together with the discussion material which helps to focus attention on strategic issues in both Canada and the United States they provide a useful introduction to current debates over housing policy
