

Employability, The Labor Force And The Economy

By Nicolas Polopogonis, Ph.D., LUTCE on November 16, 2012

Filed Under: Employment Report, Macroeconomics, Post-Secondary Education

Employability is based on a set of individual characteristics. It is not equivalent to employment, but rather a prerequisite for (gainful) employment. It pertains to someone's relative ability to obtain and maintain gainful employment, as well as make successful transitions from one job to the next, either within the same company or field or to a new one as the individual choices, circumstances or economic conditions may dictate. Employability will vary with economic conditions, although there are some exceptions in professions "insulated" from economic fluctuations, such as healthcare, education, defense, etc.

Definition of Employability

An amalgamated definition of employability views it from a narrow and a broad perspective. Narrowly defined, employability is a product consisting of a specific set of skills such as soft, hard, technical, transferable etc. The broad perspective includes the narrow definition and enhances it further by viewing employability as a life-long, continuous process of constantly acquiring experience, new knowledge (purposeful learning) and skills that contribute to improving one's marketability and subsequently ability to obtain and maintain gainful employment in the various labor markets. Further, employability can be defined both as a product - a set of skills - that "enables" and as a process that "empowers" an individual to acquire and improve marketable skills that can lead to gainful employment.

Employability and Its Impact on the Labor Force

Employability applies to almost everyone who is part of the labor force, as the ability to obtain, maintain and switch employment over time is imperative to anyone's survival as well as success in life, thus one has to be able to possess a set of skills that are either prerequisites or requisites in the labor market.

Employability and the Economy

Each factor of production is used differently, and labor or human capital can be used either in the process of manufacturing a product or providing a service within an economy. The distinction between labor and capital may lie on the fact that labor usually refers to blue-collar laborers/workers and human capital to white-collar workers. Labor or human capital is in limited and scarce quantity. For labor/human capital to be used efficiently, it warrants the acquisition of knowledge, skills and capabilities that employers need in our current economic times and knowledge-driven economy.

Firms and businesses are running leaner, with fewer organizational layers and prone to rapid restructuring, striving to adapt to their shareholders profit-maximizing goals (stock price appreciation and dividend growth), meet their constituents' needs and the challenges of the ever-changing internal and external environments. This changes and limits the need for redundant and bureaucratic careers even in government-held jobs. An individual's employability is of high importance, since it not only provides gainful employment but it is also a contributing factor to the individual's personal well-being and growth.

such learning serving as a meaningful alternative to conventional papers and standardized testing Portfolio Development and the Assessment of Prior Learning Perspectives Models and Practices provides a primer of flexible approaches to shaping and conducting portfolio development courses It offers practitioners in the field an extensive range of model assignments readings and classroom activities each organized around a specific theme Academic Orientation The Meaning of Education Personal Exploration Learning from the Outsider Within The World of Work and Careers and Dimensions of Expertise Twelve case studies by practitioners in the field then show how academics in the US and around the English speaking world have adapted the portfolio to changing circumstances in order to deliver academically rich educational services for adults These case studies highlight portfolio development in the context of web based instruction changing institutional imperatives service to historically disenfranchised groups partnerships with industry and cross institutional cooperation In addition to serving as a valuable hands on resource for practitioners Portfolio Development and the Assessment of Prior Learning locates portfolios and assessment in a broad social and intellectual context Thus the authors also offer an historical overview of the usefulness of portfolios in the assessment of prior learning and then consider their use in the future given current trends in higher education for adults The book explores the implications of a changing educational landscape in which new student populations budgetary pressures and understandings of knowledge both enrich and challenge student centered approaches such as portfolios The approaches and case studies are not only valuable to adult educators but equally to faculty in higher education concerned with the development of competency and outcomes based assessment

Assessment in Higher Education Samuel J. Messick, 2013-12-16 Assessment in Higher Education brings together in one place most of the major issues confronting higher education in the 1990s These include enhancing student access development and success in higher education transforming admissions testing to meet expanding educational needs resolving the politics of accountability by assessing quality outcomes of higher education assuring fair assessment responsive to human diversity and facing the technological future of higher education An integrative thread that weaves through all of these issues is the concept of equity especially as it bears on social justice in education and on fairness in assessment Another integrative thread is the role of computer and multimedia technology not only in improving the efficiency and power of all the functions of higher education assessment but also in revolutionizing the delivery of higher education itself
