

to update contributions in order to keep up with events. That was clearly a wise decision. Nevertheless, one event not recorded in this survey may well stand as one of the greatest cultural tragedies of this, or indeed perhaps of any, time. That is, of course, the reported destruction of Cambodia. The voice of protest against this ruthless evil is remarkably silent in the west – as, indeed, it is among fellow Buddhists. If this book can serve to waken a consciousness of the great achievements of Buddhist culture and life, which the world cannot afford to lose without protest, it may well serve a far more than academic purpose.

Bernard E. Meland. Fallible Forms and Symbols: Discourses of Method in a Theology of Culture. Pp. xvi + 206. (Philadelphia: Fortress Press, 1976.) $11.95.

The noted 'Chicago School' of theology still lives in the continuing work of Bernard Meland, now Professor Emeritus at the Divinity School at the University of Chicago, who remains active and in touch with current trends. This, his latest book, is a collection of essays (or 'discourses') of which roughly one third were previously published in the late 1960s and into the mid-1970s. The eleven discourses (of which my two favourites were 'Mythos and Logos' and 'Directives for Theological Method') range thoughtfully, though with some inevitable repetitiousness, over the theological landscape. My comment will be organized in terms of Meland's principal theses, running throughout the book, on (1) ontology, (2) epistemology, and (3) the philosophy of religion and culture.

I

Meland's ontological position is one he calls 'empirical realism'. He is obviously impatient with all forms of metaphysical idealism, particularly (as is shown by his repeated jabs) with 'Boston School' personalistic idealism. He wants to emphasize the directness of contact – including, importantly, the embodied contact – we have with the universe that transcends puny human personality. The universe itself is conceived in process terms:

... giving to the notion of reality the connotation of a Creative Passage in which all life is lived. In this mode of thought, it is assumed that our immediacies occur and participate in a dimension of ultimacy, however vaguely attended or unattended. Ultimacy in this context is not a nebulous term. It connotes a continuous thrust of the Creative Passage, and is thus simultaneously the present, inclusive of the legacy of the past inherent in its structure of experience, together with what is prescient of its future range (p. xiii).

Thus we are from the start not sundered from but constantly encountering the depths of ultimate reality.
