Families And Mental Illness New Directions In Professional Practice:

Families and Mental Illness Diane Marsh, 1992-04-13 This work is the most comprehensive volume to focus on new directions in professional practice with families of people with mental illness It offers a multidisciplinary systems oriented examination of theory research and practice in the area Unique features include a consideration of life span and family system and subsystem perspectives as well as the inclusion of powerful personal accounts of family members It is written from the perspective of a competence paradigm for clinical practice which offers a constructive alternative to the more prevalent pathology models of the past This work is the most comprehensive volume to focus on new directions in professional practice with families of people with mental illness It offers a multidisciplinary systems oriented examination of theory research and practice in the area Unique features include a consideration of life span and family system and subsystem perspectives as well as the inclusion of powerful personal accounts of family members It is written from the perspective of a competence paradigm for clinical practice which offers a constructive alternative to the more prevalent pathology models of the past In the era following deinstitutionalization families often have served as an extension of the mental health system There is much evidence that the needs of families are often poorly met In response to the shortcomings of the system and to their own anguish families have become increasingly assertive in articulating their needs for respect support information skills resources and services This volume is designed to provide professionals with increased understanding of the experiences and needs of families as well as with concrete suggestions for enhancing their effectiveness in meeting those needs The first three chapters are designed to explore general issues related to the family experience and family professional relationships the conceptual and empirical context and new directions in professional practice The next six chapters provide the experiential core of the volume covering such topics as life span perspectives the subjective and objective burden the family system family subsystems coping and adaptation and the needs of families The final three chapters are concerned with intervention including nonclinical strategies that are designed primarily to educate and support families and clinical strategies that are designed primarily to provide treatment The nonclinical and clinical intervention strategies that are discussed have the potential to comprise a full continuum of family oriented services that can be tailored to the needs desires and resources of particular families The final chapter is concerned with intervention on the level of the mental health system

Families and Mental Health Treatment American Psychiatric Association, Lisa B. Dixon, 1998 The book is a compendium of articles from Psychiatric Services and Hospital and Community Psychiatry on family and mental health treatment

Helping Families Cope With Mental Illness Harriet P Lefley, Mona Wasow, 2013-05-13 In this age of spiraling health care costs it is imperative that the family's role in treating patients with chronic mental illness not be overlooked by policy makers and clinicians alike The families themselves insist that the government and care providing agencies learn new ways to relate to them and patients Helping Families Cope with Mental Illness is a comprehensive guide to the family's experience of chronic and serious mental illness for clinicians and educators in a wide range of mental health disciplines. It details all major areas of the clinician-family relationship: consumer perspectives, cultural diversity, social policy, ethical issues, practical coping strategies, research and training issues, major service issues, managed care, and cost saving measures.

Families and the Mental Health System for Children and Adolescents Craig Anne Heflinger, Carol T. Nixon, 1996-03-26 Throughout this timely volume the contributors take into account the complexity and diversity of families today and the consequent impact on service delivery at the societal and policy levels.

Families and Mental Retardation Diane Marsh, 1992-05-27 Traditional pathology models do not provide a satisfactory framework for professional practice with families of people with mental retardation. Families and Mental Retardation is written from the perspective of a competence paradigm for professional practice which offers a constructive alternative to the more prevalent pathology models of the past. The goal of professional practice is to empower families in coping with the catastrophic stressor of mental retardation. Such an approach recognizes the strengths and resources of families which have often been minimized in the past and fosters new collaborative modes of family-professional relationships. Unique features include a consideration of life span and family system and subsystem perspectives as well as the inclusion of powerful personal accounts of family members. The volume is likely to be of special value to mental health and health care professionals who often receive little training in mental retardation or family-professional relations and who tend to apply a pathology model. In contrast a competence paradigm is more prevalent in education.

The Evidence-Based Practice Chris E. Stout, Randy A. Hayes, 2004-11-03 Evidence Based Practice (EBP) a trend started in the medical community is rapidly becoming of critical importance to the mental health profession as insurance companies begin to offer preferential pay to organizations using it. Featuring contributions from top researchers in the field this groundbreaking book covers everything from what EBP is and its relevance to behavioural health to specific models for application and implementation, building best practice protocols and evaluating bottom line effectiveness in your organization.

Family Psychoeducation for Serious Mental Illness Harriet P. Lefley, 2009-07-17 Research shows that many American adults with serious mental illness live with or maintain contact with their families but families are rarely given information about their relative's illness, their own needs for support are ignored. Harriet Lefley traces the history of family psychoeducation in the U.S.

Evidence-Based Practices in Mental Health Care American Psychiatric Association, 2008-05-20 As the first attempt to synthesize the movement toward widespread implementation of evidence based mental health practices this groundbreaking collection articulates the basic tenets of evidence based medicine and shows how practices proven effective by clinical services research could improve the lives of many people. Intended to stimulate much needed public discussion these remarkable contributions cover both general issues such as implementing practices in routine mental health settings including strategies for disseminating evidence based practices to staff members. Ensuring that efforts to implement such practices are informed by the knowledge and experience of administrators clinicians patients and advocates Integrating evidence based practices with the recovery model and focusing on guidelines and algorithms for pharmacologic treatment of people with severe mental illness Identifying the policy implications of the movement particularly in public sector settings and describing eight courses of action for addressing the gap between science and practice and specific practices such as Describing critical components of practices for which substantial evidence exists such as supported employment dual diagnosis services and assertive community treatment Developing an evidence base for particular populations such as children and adolescents and geriatric patients and for clinical subgroups such as patients with severe mental illness and posttraumatic stress disorder and implementing a range of practices for each population Debate in public forums is critical to explaining the benefits of evidence based care and allaying the fears of patients practitioners administrators policy makers and vested interest groups that evidence based care excludes them from the decision making process Patients need to know that their individual characteristics preferences and autonomy are highly valued and won t be discounted by rigid adherence to the particular treatments Practitioners need to know about the credibility of the evidence base and about new techniques and responsibilities and to understand that their favorite practices won t necessarily be excluded during initial attempts to implement evidence based practices Administrators and policy makers need to know about financing organizing implementing and sustaining new practices Finally vested interest groups need to know that the introduction of evidence based practices doesn t mean that what they do now is ineffective This unique and densely informative volume will be welcomed by mental health care professionals and by lawmakers planners administrators and others who are charged with the responsibility of providing effective care to vulnerable populations
