Families And The Gravely Ill Roles Rules And Rights Contributions In Medical Studies No 23:

Families and the Gravely Ill Richard Sherlock, C Mary Dingus, 1988-09-26 This volume joins other recently published works on the ethical and legal considerations of life sustaining treatments Sherlock and Dingus focus on medical decision making involving children and incompetent adults and the issue of how these decisions should be made Discussion begins with the various meanings of family and the psychosocial issues in family involvement The authors explore differences in decision making for the incompetent adult and for the child and consider the pros and cons of family decision making as well as alternative decision making methods They argue for an ethics committee review of selected difficult cases The use of relevant cases to depict the legal aspects involved in medical decision making for children and incompetent adults helps clarify the issues involved A valuable reference for graduate or professional collections Choice Written by a specialist in medical ethics and a practicing medical psychologist this book is a comprehensive review of the complex issues involved in family decisionmaking in medicine Although much has been written about the treatment of seriously ill patients little has been written about those involved in the complicated decisionmaking process for incompetent patients This volume therefore fills an important gap in the literature In addition to treating general issues in ethics and psychology the authors also address the realities of actual clinical decisionmaking setting their work apart from more traditional studies of medical ethics
