Families Households And Society:

Families, Households and Society Graham Allan, Graham Crow, 2001-01-02 Patterns of household and family life are changing radically leading sociologists to develop new conceptualizations and understandings of the relationships involved This book examines the character of these changes exploring the growing diversity there is in people s domestic circumstances It is particularly concerned with the blurred boundaries between households and families and the tensions that can arise in the solidarities and obligations experienced as household and family processes unfold

Families, Households and Society Graham A. Allan, Graham Crow, Recent decades have witnessed remarkable changes in family patterns and household organisation In particular contemporary family and household relationships have become far more diverse than they were previously This book examines the character of these changes providing a systematic overview of the ways in which domestic arrangements have been altering Moreover it places these developments in family and domestic life in their wider economic social and demographic contexts showing how family patterns can be understood only by linking what happens inside families with the broader environments in which they operate Particular attention is paid in the text to the growth of new forms of solidarity and fragmentation within families and households including cohabitation divorce lone parent households and step families The book also focuses on the dynamics of family and household organisation emphasising the changes that occur in people s domestic relationships as their life course position alters Thus in addition to examining the contemporary organisation of marriage including the domestic division of labour and patterns of resource allocation it also analyses the household and family circumstances of young adults and people over retirement age In focusing on diversity and change in domestic relationships the book reflects the revitalisation evident in the sociology of family life in recent years a period in which new research questions and fresh understandings have emerged about the ways in which people organise their lives as members of households and families Graham Allan is Reader in Sociology at the University of Southampton His interests include sociology of the family community and friendship Graham Crow is Senior Lecturer in Sociology at the University of Southampton His interests include the sociology of domestic life community sociological theory and comparative sociology
