

EMOTION-FOCUSED COPING

Emotion-focused coping refers to strategies to manage stress that involve emotional regulation. It is juxtaposed to the problem-focused approach.

DEFINITION

Lazarus and Folkman (1984) make a distinction between problem-focused and emotion-focused coping:

"a distinction that we believe is of overriding importance, namely, between coping that is directed at managing or altering the problem causing the distress and coping that is directed at regulating emotional response to the problem" (p. 150).

EXAMPLES

Journaling: Writing about stressful events is a way of releasing negative energy. Describing what happened can increase perceptions of control and help regulate emotions.

Selective Attention: After a difficult day at work, focusing on the positive things that happened can reduce the anxiety of the negative events that occurred that day.
