A Revolution in Family Policy Henricson, Clem, 2012-09-26 This book offers a radical rethink of family policy in the UK Clem Henricson the family policy expert analyses in detail the major shift in the role of the state viz a viz personal relationships in recent years with its aspirations to reduce child poverty increase social mobility and deliver social cohesion Brought in by New Labour and carried forward albeit in diluted form by the Coalition Henricson asks whether this philosophy of social betterment through manipulating the parent child relationship is appropriate for family policy She challenges the thinking behind the expectation that you can change a highly unequal society through the family route Instead the argument is made for a family policy with its own raison d'être free of other government agendas A premium is set on the need to manage the multiple core tensions in families of affection empathy and supportiveness on the one hand and aggression deception and self interest on the other A set of coherent support and control policies for family relations are developed which endorse this awareness and embrace a fundamental shift in perspective for future progressive governments indicate a new trend towards racist exclusion This book places family migration policies in the broader perspective of changing family norms In doing so it shows the added value of studying immigration law not as an isolated field but in connection with other fields of law and policy Taking the Netherlands as an example it shows how family migration policies have evolved from a system premised on the male breadwinner citizen's right to domicile to one granting and restricting freedom of movement according to individual merit Although grounded in a different ethos the techniques of power now being used to enforce the emerging distinctions of a globalising world are in fact reminiscent of those once used to enforce the racial and gendered distinctions of the colonial past
