

A Precious Resource

The bison population in the United States has declined significantly since the late 19th century. In 1889, there were an estimated 30 million bison in the wild. By 1900, the population had dropped to around 1,000. Today, there are approximately 40,000 bison in the United States, mostly in national parks and reserves.

Bison are a keystone species in the Great Plains ecosystem. They play a vital role in maintaining the health of the grasslands by grazing on the vegetation. Their droppings provide nutrients to the soil, and their grazing helps to prevent the growth of invasive species. Bison are also a source of food and clothing for Native Americans.

In the late 19th century, the bison population was decimated by overhunting and the destruction of their habitat. The bison were nearly extinct by the early 20th century. Today, bison are protected in national parks and reserves, and their population is slowly recovering. However, they still face many challenges, including habitat loss and disease.

Bison are a valuable resource for Native Americans. They provide food, clothing, and shelter. Bison are also a symbol of strength and resilience for many Native American tribes.
