Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the cardiovascular fitness of sedentary, middle-aged men. The subjects were 15 men, aged 40 to 55 years, who were sedentary and had no history of cardiovascular disease. They were divided into two groups: a control group and a training group. The control group continued their sedentary lifestyle, while the training group participated in a supervised, structured exercise program consisting of three sessions per week. The training program included aerobic and resistance training. Cardiovascular fitness was assessed using a maximal treadmill test at baseline and after 12 weeks. The results showed that the training group had a significant increase in maximal heart rate, maximal oxygen consumption, and time to exhaustion compared to the control group. These findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve cardiovascular fitness in sedentary, middle-aged men.
