

Parallel Domain Decomposition Method for Mixed Finite Elements for Elliptic Partial Differential Equations

Lawrence C. Cowar*
Mary F. Wheeler*

Abstract. In this paper we develop a parallel domain decomposition method for mixed finite element methods. This algorithm is based on a procedure first formulated by Glowinski and Wheeler for a two subdomain problem. This present work involves extensions of the above method to an arbitrary number of subdomains with an inner product modification and multilevel acceleration. Both Neumann and Dirichlet boundary conditions are treated. Numerical experiments performed on the Intel iPSC/860 Hypercube are presented and indicate that this approach is scalable and fairly insensitive to variation in coefficients.

1. Introduction. Mixed finite methods are known to be important in modeling flow in porous media. In a mixed finite element formulation both pressure and velocities are approximated simultaneously. In addition, approximating spaces may be chosen so that mass is conserved cell by cell. Application of these methods to porous media problems was first proposed and analyzed in [6, 7] and computational results presented in [3].

We note that standard petroleum industrial simulators employ cell centered finite difference methods for approximating the pressure equation. Russell and Wheeler in [14] first showed that these difference methods are in fact the lowest order Raviart-Thomas mixed finite element method with special numerical quadrature. A second remark is that the approximation of the pressure equation is the most costly portion of the numerics in a reservoir simulator. Evidence of this is easily discernible from the petroleum engineering literature which contains a large number of papers on linear solvers.

Because flow in porous media problems are computationally intensive, many government and industrial laboratories are investigating parallel algorithms for reservoir
