Fiorino, 2006 Winner 2007 Louis Brownlow Award presented by the National Academy of Public Administration NAPA and 2006 Best Book in Environmental Management and Policy American Society for Public Administration Environmental regulation in the United States has succeeded to a certain extent in solving the problems it was designed to address air water and land are indisputably cleaner and in better condition than they would be without the environmental controls put in place since 1970 But Daniel Fiorino argues in The New Environmental Regulation that given recent environmental economic and social changes it is time for a new more effective model of environmental problem solving Fiorino provides a comprehensive but concise overview of U S environmental regulation its history its rationale and its application and offers recommendations for a more collaborative flexible and performance based alternative Traditional environmental regulation was based on the increasingly outdated assumption that environmental protection and business are irreversibly at odds The new environmental regulation Fiorino describes is based on performance rather than on a narrow definition of compliance and uses such policy instruments as market incentives and performance measurement It takes into consideration differences in the willingness and capabilities of different firms to meet their environmental obligations and it encourages innovation by allowing regulated industries especially the better performers more flexibility in how they achieve environmental goals Fiorino points to specific programs including the 33 50 Program innovative permitting and the use of covenants as environmental policy instruments in the Netherlands that have successfully pioneered these new strategies By bringing together such a wide range of research and real world examples Fiorino has created an invaluable resource for practitioners and scholars and an engaging text for environmental policy courses The Oxford Handbook of Transformations of the State Stephan Leibfried, Evelyne Huber, Matthew Lange, Jonah D. Rethinking Authority in Global Climate Governance Thomas Hickmann, 2015-10-16 In the past few years numerous authors have highlighted the emergence of transnational climate initiatives such as city networks private certification schemes and business self regulation in the policy domain of climate change While these transnational governance arrangements can surely contribute to solving the problem of climate change their development by different types of sub and non state actors does not imply a weakening of the intergovernmental level On the contrary many transnational climate initiatives use the international climate regime as a point of reference and have adopted various rules and procedures from international agreements Rethinking Authority in Global Climate Governance puts forward this argument and expands upon it using case studies which suggest that the effective operation of transnational climate initiatives strongly relies on the existence of an international regulatory framework created by nation states Thus this book emphasizes the centrality of the intergovernmental process clustered around the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change UNFCCC and underscores that multilateral treaty making continues to be more important than many scholars and policy makers suppose This book will be of great interest to students and scholars of global environmental politics climate change and sustainable development
