Beers, 2015-07-13 Excerpt from Four Americans Roosevelt Hawthorne Emerson Whitman In a club corner just after Roosevelt's death the question was asked whether his memory would not fade away when the living man with his vivid personality had gone But no that personality had stamped itself too deeply on the mind of his generation to be forgotten Too many observers have recorded their impressions and already a dozen biographies and memoirs have appeared Besides he is his own recorder He published twenty six books a catalogue of which any professional author might be proud and a really wonderful feat when it is remembered that he wrote them in the intervals of an active public career as Civil Service Commissioner Police Commissioner member of his state legislature Governor of New York delegate to the National

Four Americans Henry Beers, 2017-07-17 The biography of four ingenious American men with great contributions to American literature politics culture music and more Well written at Henry Beers point view An excerpt from Four Americans And the bittern sound his drum Booming from the sedgy shallow See even old Chaucer who knew a thing or two about birds teste his Parlament of Foules admirably but strangely edited by Lounsbury whose indifference to art was only surpassed by his hostility to nature Says Chaucer And as a bytoure bumblith in the myre My friend canceled his note It is of course now established that the bittern booms not in the mud but in the air Mr Roosevelt was historian biographer essayist and writer of narrative papers on hunting outdoor life and natural history and in all these departments did solid important work His Winning of the West is little if at all inferior in historical interest to the similar writings of Parkman and John Fiske His History of the Naval War of 1812 is an astonishing performance for a young man of twenty four only two years out of college For it required a careful sifting of evidence and weighing of authorities
