

Bill Powers is U.S. co-chair of the San Diego-Tijuana EPA/SEMARNAT Border 2012 Air Work Group. The purpose of the binational Air Work Group is to promote and develop steps to reduce air pollution in the California/Baja California sector of the U.S.–Mexico border. He is also chair of the Border Power Plant Working Group (www.borderpowerplants.org) a binational, nonprofit organization founded in 2001 to advocate for sustainable energy infrastructure development in the border region. Mr. Powers has a B.S. in Mechanical Engineering from Duke University and an M.S. in Environmental Science from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, and is a registered mechanical engineer in California.

Mr. Powers is also the principal of Powers Engineering, an environmental consulting engineering firm established in San Diego in 1994. Recent projects include an assessment of energy requirements and renewable energy opportunities in Baja California and evaluation of the effectiveness of the U.S.–Mexico binational agreement to minimize SO₂ emissions from border copper smelters.

Energy, the Environment, and the California – Baja California Border Region

The continued development of Baja California as an electricity and natural gas supply source for California is not in the best public interest of the citizens of Baja California or California. Siting power plants in the badly contaminated Imperial County – Mexicali air basin to serve Southern California load center raises serious environmental justice issues on both sides of the border that are not adequately addressed by existing environmental protection regulations.

Bill Powers

The California – Baja California border region has become a focal point of energy infrastructure development in the aftermath of deregulation in U.S. power markets and the liberalization of the energy supply in Mexico. Baja California is viewed by international power and liquefied natural gas (LNG) proponents as an excellent site for projects destined to serve the California market.

In response, strong grassroots movements have developed on both sides of the border that are questioning the strategic need for this infrastructure, and demanding higher environmental standards for those projects that are built. The continued development of Baja California as an electricity and natural gas supply source for California has significant and negative air and water quality implications for Baja California.
