SIGNED WITH THEIR HONOR

"The death of a gallant adversary will bring no feelings of joy to the heart of a chivalrous fighter. Contentment yes, if he was the one who defeated him in a fair fight. But joy, no. On the contrary, he may be downhearted, and feel regret that the man could not have been brought down alive.

"This can only sound paradoxical to those who do not take into account that chivalry implies regarding and treating an honourable adversary with courtesy and respect, recognising him not only as an equal but also as one who belongs to the same international brotherhood of men-at-arms, at the same time being duty-bound to fight him and try to defeat him."
