Woodworth,Gina M. Leininger,2017-12-06 Food and water are necessary for survival but can only be obtained via ingestive behavior feeding drinking and moving Survival thus depends on the ability of the brain to coordinate the need for water and energy with appropriate behaviors to modify their intake as necessary for homeostasis However the balance of these behaviors also inherently determines body weight and imbalances contribute to the development of weight disorders such as obesity and anorexia nervosa The lateral hypothalamic area LHA of the brain is anatomically positioned to coordinate the sensation of osmotic and energy status with goal directed ingestive behaviors necessary to maintain homeostasis and body weight and hence may hold insight into the potential treatment for energy balance disorders This volume reviews the essential role of the LHA for the control of body weight from its historical description as a feeding center to the current view of this LHA as a cellularly heterogeneous hub that regulates multiple aspects of physiology to influence body weight Furthermore we evaluate how specific LHA populations coordinate certain metabolic cues and behaviors which may guide the development of pathway specific interventions to improve the treatment of energy balance disorders    LIFE ,1966-05-06 LIFE Magazine is the treasured photographic magazine that chronicled the 20th Century It now lives on at LIFE com the largest most amazing collection of professional photography on the internet Users can browse search and view photos of today s people and events They have free access to share print and post images for personal use    Wind Energy for Agriculture Jayne T.
