length which will define the desired angle. In Fig. 11-6, it is required to lay off an angle $\angle Pn$ (or θ) from line PA. The chord length is first determined from the equation $d = L \sin(\theta/2)$, where θ is the desired angle and L is any convenient length laid out along line PA. Then, point n is established by laying out from P , and along line PA, a convenient length of tape. The tape is then swung through the arc and accordingly the arc traced is marked on the line. With n as center, the computed chord length is laid out and swung through an arc, and its intersection with the first arc establishes point n . Line pn is the desired required chord length, and the angle $\angle Pn$ is the desired

Determining Obstructed Distances. In some instances it is not possible to directly measure distances due to obstruction. The required length may also be inaccessible. The following are some of the methods which could be employed to determine obstructed distances.

g. 11-7, point C is established at a convenient distance away from the obstruction and it is seen to intersect at right angles. Both A and B are as accurately as possible. If A and B are points of the required line, the length of the line AB in Fig. 11-7 can be determined by the pythagorean theorem or
