François Villon Dominic Bevan Wyndham Lewis,1928 William Dunbar Ian Simpson Ross,2023-08-21 François Villon Dominic Bevan Wyndham Lewis,1928 In preliminary and vivid chapters Lewis sets out the assured background the university and town of Paris when Charles VII and Louis XI reigned and the wretched Hundred Years of War had brought as its sequel the disintegration of the Middle Ages He addresses himself to the life employing the barest and most reasonable assumptions and mindful that dispute is possible as to this or that detail comes to the abundant and valuable pages in which the written deeds of the man are analyzed For after all Villon is his own sufficient biographer and no touch of self revelation shall be missed From this running commentary along with its appended Cream of the Testaments and selection of famous versions there emerges the conviction that Villon is of the abiding poets He is Parisian French and universal The dying Middle Ages found a last voice in him and France its first modern He has the whole secret of that romantic irony which Byron and the German Romantic School used and was Verlaine s own Verlaine a criminal and rare poet The Kadelbian Review ,1928 Includes directory and notes of Kappa Delta Pi A Short History of Civilization Henry Stephen Lucas,1953

The Poetry of Basil Bunting Victoria Forde,1991 Basil Bunting did not believe in biography He used to assert that his great poem Briggflatts was his autobiography and that nothing else was worth saying He had scant respect for critics and gave little away about his life or misled his would be biographers whose accounts of him were often semi mythical But Bunting s real life does read like an adventure story Born in Northumberland in 1900 he lived in Paris in the twenties where Ezra Pound rescued him from jail and fixed him up with a job on the Transatlantic Review In 1923 he followed Pound to Italy giving up his job to Hemingway where Yeats knew him as one of Pound s more savage disciples For the next thirty years he led a sometimes wild and always varied life in Italy England Berlin Tenerife America and Persia as a struggling penniless writer a music critic sea captain RAF officer Times correspondent and Chief of Political Intelligence in Teheran During these years he built up a reputation in America as the best English poet of his generation at the same time as his poetry was neglected in Britain It was not until the publication of Briggflatts in 1966 that his genius was finally recognised He was in his seventies when he first met the American critic Sister Victoria Forde who was working on a study of music and meaning in his poetry They continued to meet and correspond and his comments and answers to her letters now form an integral part of the book which grew out of her academic research This is the first critical study of Bunting s poetry It is a brilliantly researched book drawing upon the work and letters of Bunting and his contemporaries as well as interviews and correspondence with his family and includes over thirty previously unpublished photographs of and by Bunting taken throughout his life The Publishers Weekly ,1930 François Villon, Bibliographie und Materialien 1489-1988: Bibliographie Rudolf Sturm,1990 Catalog Warburg Institute.
