linguistic resources and the languages they use in the research process are often politically and structurally shaped and constrained with implications for the reliability of the research. The chapters are written by both experienced and novice researchers who examine how they negotiated the use of their own and others' linguistic and communicative resources when undertaking their research in politically charged and linguistically and culturally diverse contexts. The contributing authors are either from the Global South or engaged in work which is contextualised within the Global South or they face linguistic structural hegemonies in the Global North which challenge their research processes. They utilise diverse theoretical, methodological and disciplinary approaches to produce a collection of engaging and accessible accounts of researching multilingually in their contexts. These accounts will help readers to make theoretically and methodologically informed choices about the political dimensions of languages in their own research when researching multilingually. World Englishes

Claire Lefebvre, 2011-01-01 Since creole languages draw their properties from both their substrate and superstrate sources, the typological classification of creoles has long been a major issue for creolists, typologists and linguists in general. Several contradictory proposals have been put forward in the literature. For example, creole languages typologically pair with their superstrate languages (Chaudenson 2003) with their substrate languages (Lefebvre 1998) or even creole languages are alike (Bickerton 1984) such that they constitute a definable typological class (McWhorter 1998). This book contains 25 chapters bearing on detailed comparisons of some 30 creoles and their substrate languages. As the substrate languages of these creoles are typologically different, the detailed investigation of substrate features in the creoles leads to a particular answer to the question of how creoles should be classified typologically. The bulk of the data show that creoles reproduce the typological features of their substrate languages. This argues that creoles cannot be claimed to constitute a definable typological class. Músicas y prácticas sonoras en el Caribe colombiano Ochoa Escobar, Federico, Rojas, Juan Sebastián
