A large, nearly featureless plain in the desert is home to one of America's last wild herds of free-roaming horses. But finding the horses of Pryor Mountain, Nevada, has become a frustrating task for the Bureau of Land Management. As you stand on the rim of a canyon, across a rugged divide, you can see evidence of a herd of wild horses in the distance. But the horses themselves are nowhere to be seen. They're elusive, and they're hard to find. It's almost ironic, really: the horses are wild, but the country is not. The land is owned and managed by the federal government, and the horses are wild. The horses are wild, but the country is not. The horses are wild, but the country is not. The horses are wild, but the country is not.
