Fighting In The Air:

Fighting in the Air Lionel Wilmot Brabazon Rees, 1917 Fundamentals of Air Fighting United States. Army Air Forces. Flying Training Command, 1942 The information contained in the following pages has been derived from official and accurate reports of actual air combats and operations Much of what is repeated here is as old as air fighting itself The information portrayed is disseminated not as inflexible rules or directives but rather imparts something of what has been learned of air operations thus far and to encourage initiative and study of the subjects covered by all flying personnel The air fighter must be constantly awake to all developments be ever alert to use his best talents to meet the ever fast moving panorama of air warfare To anticipate future developments one must have some knowledge of past and present methods
