RESEARCH OF TOXICITY OF CHITOSAN-BASED FILM-FORMING COMPOSITIONS

Із розглянутих композицій на основі хітозану та на основі аналізу характеристики лікарських відварів було обрано 20 видів для подальшого складання композицій з хітозаном 2 %. Для встановлення їх безпечного використання в плодоовочевій продукції всі зразки досліджені на токсичність та зони гемолізу. При проведенні досліджень отримані позитивні результати – не було виявлено токсичності та зони гемолізу.

Ключові слова: композиції на основі хітозану, відвари лікарських трав, токсичність композицій, зони гемолізу на відварах, кров'яний агар.

1. Introduction

Food spoilage is inevitable – it's only a matter of time and the influence of external factors. The problem of preserving quality through the use of effective methods and storage technologies is especially relevant for perishable products that have a high moisture content, such as fruit and vegetable crops.

The main reason for the spoilage of fruits and vegetables during storage is the spread of microorganisms that cause various diseases. The development of pathogens can be prevented or slowed down by the creation and use of food packages that have a complex of antimicrobial properties – bactericidal and fungicidal.

Over the past decades, the evolution of technology has evolved from the large-scale storage of fruits and vegetables (under artificial cooling, a controlled gas environment) to small-party (in a modified gas environment, a biological vacuum) and individual. Expansion in the market has received «active» packaging of fruit and vegetable products, which, in addition to traditional mechanical and barrier protective functions, can have a targeted effect on packaged products, including antimicrobial ones. As a consequence, their storage periods are significantly increased.

Today, the problem of preserving fresh fruits and vegetables to ensure their population during the year can be solved by developing and introducing storage technology by treating them with film-forming solutions with antimicrobial properties.

2. The object of research and its technological audit

Chitosan (Fig. 1) is a high molecular weight glucosamine polymer derived from chitin. Chitosan is one of the most common polysaccharides. As the most common organic compound, it occupies the second position after cellulose.

The unique properties of chitosan and inexhaustible supplies of raw materials cause considerable interest in its production and practical application (Fig. 2) [1].

Fig. 1. Structural formula of chitosan

Fig. 2. Properties and sources of chitosan

To improve the antimicrobial properties of chitosan-based film-forming compositions, in order to enhance its preservative effect on microorganisms, it has been proposed to add decoctions from medicinal plants.

Medicinal herbs were chosen from those used in medicine as anti-inflammatory and wound-healing preparations, hence they have pronounced antibacterial (bactericidal and bacteriostatic) and antifungal (fungicidal and fungistatic) properties.

It is known that the antimicrobial effect of medicinal plants is due to their chemical composition, namely the content of basic BAS (biologically active substances) [2]. Based on the above factors, the broths of medicinal herbs were investigated. As objects of the study, 20 types of film-forming compositions based on chitosan and herbal decoctions were selected (Table 1).
