Single Parents Can WIN With Money Being a single parent is really tough. I know that first hand. And I also know what it feels like to worry about not having enough money to pay the rent or put food on the table. I'll never forget how it felt to stand in line at the grocery store and wonder how I would pay for the food that my children needed. When I was growing up, my parents thought they were teaching me about money. They taught me how to balance a checkbook, but I never learned how to make sure I was spending less than I made. I needed a plan. In Show Your Paycheck Who's Boss, we cover financial topics that are specific to single parents. Do you pay or receive child support? How should you handle paying for birthday and holiday gifts? What if your kids just want to eat pizza all the time? Along with practical advice about getting rid of debt and saving for emergencies and retirement, we've included three planners: Mindful Positivity Planner, Career Planner, 100 Day Action Plan. Single parents really can be successful financially, and you can teach your kids how to do it too. The Single Parent's
