Demirguc Kunt and Levine introduce a new database of indicators of financial development and structure across countries and over time This database is unique in that it unites a variety of indicators that measure the size activity and efficiency of financial intermediaries and markets It improves on previous efforts by presenting data on the public share of commercial banks by introducing indicators of the size and activity of nonbank financial institutions and by presenting measures of the size of bond and primary equity markets The compiled data permit the construction of financial structure indicators to measure whether for example a country's banks are larger more active and more efficient than its stock markets These indicators can then be used to investigate the empirical link between the legal regulatory and policy environment and indicators of financial structure They can also be used to analyze the implications of financial structure for economic growth Beck Demirguc Kunt and Levine describe the sources and construction of and the intuition behind different indicators and present descriptive statistics This paper a product of Finance Development Research Group is part of a broader effort in the group to understand the determinants of financial structure and its importance to economic development The authors may be contacted at tbeck@worldbank.org ademirguckunt@worldbank.org or rlevine@csom.umn.edu

Financial Structure and Economic Growth - Case of Vietnam Huan Nguyen, 2014 This paper estimates the actual role of the financial structure for economic growth in Vietnam by using Granger causality test and VAR Cholesky technique The results show that there is almost no evidence on the relationship between stock market development and economic growth Instead Vietnam's financial structure mainly bases on the banking system and major source of capital in the economy flows through this channel with total outstanding bank loans equivalent to 100% of the GDP Meanwhile Stock market does not perform well in mobilizing medium and long term capital with the market capitalization only about 30% of the GDP of the economy

Financial Structure and Economic Growth Nexus Revisited Lan Chu Khanh, 2019 This paper empirically reassesses the long debated relationship between financial structure and economic growth Specifically we examine whether the effect of financial structure on economic growth is affected by the financial structure disproportion banking crisis economic volatility and level of financial development We employ the generalized method of moments estimation to a large panel of 100 countries over the 1971-2015 period Although the main result supports market based view the positive effect of stock market development relative to banking system decreases significantly if financial structure is unbalanced Our findings are robust to a variety of sensitivity check including different measures of financial structure periods and model specifications

Financial Structure, Economic Growth and Development Franklin Allen, Xian Gu, Oskar Kowalewski, 2018 Financial intermediaries and markets can alleviate market frictions through producing information and risk sharing in different ways In practice the structure of financial systems can be bank based or market based varying across countries The influence of financial structure on economic growth is dependent on the overall development of the real economy and institutions The association is also different during crisis periods and non crisis periods Market based systems tend to have an advantage for financially dependent industries in good times but are a disadvantage in bad times The recent rapid growth of shadow banking benefits economic growth but also poses additional risks to the financial system and real economy

Financial Structures and Economic Outcomes Mr.Tom Gole,Tao Sun,2013-05-22 This paper investigates the potential relationships between financial structures and economic outcomes The empirical results that withstand a battery of methods suggest that some financial intermediation structures are likely to be more closely related to positive economic outcomes than others For instance protective financial buffers within institutions have been associated with better economic performance and a domestic financial system that is dominated by some types of nontraditional bank intermediation or that has a high proportion of foreign banks has in some cases been associated with adverse economic outcomes especially during the financial crisis The results also suggest that there may be trade offs between beneficial effects on growth and stability of some financial structures For example the positive association of financial buffers with growth can diminish above a certain relatively high threshold a too safe system may limit the available funds for credit and hence growth
