Financing Presidential Campaigns ,1982 Welfare for Politicians? John Samples,2005-03-25 Candidates and parties need money to fight election campaigns In the United States this money comes largely from individuals and groups not the government and taxpayers Many people criticize such private financing of politics Private donations they claim advance special interests thereby corrupting politics and government Some critics argue that government should ban private campaign contributions in favor of financing by taxpayers Since public money comes from everyone they reason it actually comes from no one which cuts out corruption before it begins But taxpayer financing of campaigns such as the income tax check off for presidential campaigns has its share of critics who point out that public financing has often come up short in terms of increasing electoral competition Another major problem concerns the taxpayers who are called on to fund these programs Taxpayer financing in polls and in reality lacks public support The public resists giving welfare to politicians to run their campaigns In Welfare for Politicians leading analysts from both sides of the public financing debate address the history of these programs including the successes and failures of the financing system for presidential elections They also take up recent innovations in the states including models of full taxpayer financing passed by initiative in Arizona Maine and Massachusetts Together they offer a groundbreaking analysis of the problem and an instructive guide to future reform

Public Financing of Presidential Campaigns R. Sam Garrett,2014-10-31 The presidential public campaign financing program the Presidential Election Campaign Fund PEF is funded through checkoff designations on individual income tax returns Choosing to participate or not in the checkoff does not affect one's tax liability or refund Candidates who choose to participate in the program may receive taxpayer funded matches of privately raised funds during primary campaigns and grants during the general election contest Public funds also subsidize nominating conventions The public financing system has remained largely unchanged since the 1970s However there is general agreement that if the program is to be maintained updates are necessary to provide greater financial resources and higher spending limits to participants Some contend that the program should be curtailed or eliminated
