

Film Techniques

Shots -

	What is it?	Examples:	Effect:
Extreme close up	An extreme close up frames a subject very closely. This means that one part of the subject is focused on.		The viewer enters the characters personal space Reveals traits and emotions that would otherwise go unnoticed.
Mid shot
Reaction shot	A reaction shot refers to when an action takes place on screen, and then cuts to a separate shot that allows the viewer to see the reaction to this action from other players in the scene. This can be a reaction from a human, animal, or any form with a perceptible personality.		They add to the drama that is being shown throughout the film. It can also act as a relief from the drama, introducing a bit of humor. Additionally, reaction shots make it possible for the scene to last longer, allowing the viewer to have more time to go deeper into the situation and digest it.
Long shot (wide shot)	Long shot is a camera angle that shows the entire object or person and their relation to what surrounds them.		They allow the audience to absorb all the information at once.
Extreme long shot (extreme wide shot)	The extreme long shot (extreme long shot) is a description used to define the camera angle that is so far away from the subject that he/she isn't necessarily the focus anymore.		They are designed to show the audience where the action is taking place.
