Skills' Mining Review, 1982 Evaluation of Electrical Energy Consumption and Reduction Potential at the 7th Army Training Command (ATC), U.S. Army, Europe William R. Taylor, Michael A. Dubravec, 1990 The 7th Army Training Command ATC U S Army Europe has accrued increasingly higher electrical utility bills over the past few years As is true at most installations the 7th ATC buildings are not equipped with electricity meters so it is difficult to identify the major power consumers To determine electrical energy use patterns and potentially find energy conservation opportunities ECOs the 7th ATC asked the U S Army Construction Engineering Research Laboratory USACERL to study electricity consumption at two of its communities Grafenwohr and Hohenfels Federal Republic of Germany Results of the predictive modeling and field testing showed several possible ECOs at Grafenwohr and Hohenfels such as dimming exterior lights during some hours of the night providing better controls on oversized ventilation systems in gymnasiums and training dining hall personnel in energy conservative practices A major electrical power consumer is the training ranges however since the training mission has priority over energy use little can be done at this time to reduce consumption there In the future target ranges may become available that provide the same quality of training with a lower energy demand Keywords Buildings Electrical energy consumption Energy consumption 7th Army Training Command U S Army Europe SDW
