AUTHOR, 2015-06-11 Excerpt from How to Make a Flower Garden A Manual of Practical Information and Suggestions The home garden is for the affections It is for quality Its size is wholly immaterial if only it have the best I do not mean the rarest or the costliest but the best the best geranium or the best lilac Even the fruit garden and the vegetable garden are also for the affections one can buy ordinary fruits and vegetables it never pays to grow them in the home garden When you want something superior you must grow it or else buy it at an advanced price directly from some one who grows for quality and not for quantity If you want the very choicest and the most personal products almost necessarily you must grow them the value of these things cannot be measured in money The commercial gardener may grow what the market wants and the market wants chiefly what is cheap and good looking The home gardener should grow what the market cannot supply else the home garden is not worth the while A garden is a place in which plants are grown and plants are herbs and vines and bushes and trees and grass Too often do persons think that only formal and pretentious places are gardens But an open lawn about the house may be a garden so may a row of hollyhocks along the wall or an arrangement of plants in the greenhouse Usually there is some central feature to a garden a theme to which all other parts relate This may be a walk or a summer house or a sun dial or a garden bed or the residence itself or a brook falling down the sward between trees and bushes and clumpy growths About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy In rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition We do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works
