The funding of science and discovery centres Great Britain: Parliament: House of Commons: Science and Technology Committee,2007-10-22 Science and discovery centres make up an extremely diverse group with the common characteristic of the use of interactive exhibits to promote awareness of scientific issues and to spark people s curiosity particularly those of children and young people They provide informal education in all kinds of scientific and technological areas including astronomy ecology energy generation engineering marine biology medicine and physics The Committee's report examines the role and effectiveness of science centres how science centres are co-ordinated and organised and how they are funded Findings include that in the short term given that a number of science centres are struggling financially and risk closure the Government should make available limited competitively awarded short term funding to support these centres as well as reducing the tax burden on science and other educational centres However the Committee agrees with the Government's stance that it should not fund failing centres and recommends that the Government commission independent research to ascertain their effectiveness Ecsite.uk is well placed to assess models that exist in Scotland and internationally with a view to implementing structural and best practice guidance that promotes co-ordination between science centres across the UK The report also welcomes the offer by the Department for Innovation Universities and Skills to take responsibility for science centres and recommends that this responsibility be formally written into the Ministerial portfolio
