Garden Lost In Time:

A Garden Lost in Time Jonathan Aycliffe, January 1917 Cornwall Fifteen year old Simon Lysaght is sent after the death of his father in France to live with family at their estate house Trevelyan Priors His uncle Sir David Trevelyan is somewhat intimidating and Simon feels ill at ease in the large and forbidding house On his first day Simon learns of the death of the eldest Trevelyan son in the war and the subsequent suicide of his fianc e is warned never to wander the corridors of the house after dark by the younger Trevelyan son crippled and bed ridden William and hears that a maid has jumped from a high window killing her self It is not an auspicious start to his life under the Trevelyan s roof Soon however his cousin Tom takes him under his wing and shows Simon the grounds and estate including the still functioning shot tower a tall building which dominates the skyline Exploring further one day after a heavy snow the boys enter an enclosed garden long abandoned and overgrown with dark avenues of trees and bushes and a for mal fountain laid out in the centre In the untouched snow a set of footprints with no discernible beginning or end Who do they belong to and how did they get there Simon can see no answer but is soon occupied by other more urgent matters and the incident is pushed from his mind Weeks later however he has reason to recall the strange sight when he encoun ters a girl of his own age in the aban doned garden She tells him her name is Lily a fisherman s daughter from nearby Porthmullion They strike up a friend ship although for reasons he cannot fully explain to himself Simon keeps his new acquaintance a secret He is soon to find that Trevelyan Priors and its inhabitants all have much to hide and more to tell than he can yet guess at

A Garden Lost in Time Penny David,1999 For Half a Century the Gardens at Aberglasney were left to decay The Japanese knotweed imported as a Victorian exotic grew taller than a man the yew and box ran wild and ivy roots grew fat in the ancient stonework of the massive walls The gardens all but disappeared beneath a shroud of green Visitors forcing their way through this jungle noticed the unusual layout and as word spread the importance of the site was acknowledged and at last an ambitious plan of restoration was put in hand What those early visitors had seen were the raised arcaded terrace walkways of an ancient garden As the experts moved in and restoration began the questions provoked by the unfolding evidence became more startling still was this the only survivor of a Renaissance plan in Britain overlying a medieval garden The mysterious and venerable yew tunnel was believed by some to be 1 000 years old by others just 700 The nine gardens of Aberglasney were first mentioned by a fifteenth century bard This is the story of their fate under a succession of owners whose varying fortunes brought fashionable changes at one moment and fateful neglect at another culminating in a spiral of decline from which the rescue of the 1990s emerged as no less than miraculous Through this compelling narrative history Penny David poses the myriad fascinating questions raised by the experts as they dug and delved into the structures and meaning of these ancient gardens
