Military Architecture in England During the Middle Ages offers readers a meticulous exploration of fortification developments from the remnants of ancient earthworks and Roman fortifications to the formidable castles of the Middle Ages and the transition into more domestic fortified houses. The book is written with an erudite grasp of architectural evolution set against the historical backdrop of military strategies evolving weaponry and the socio-political forces that influenced architectural decisions. Thompson's detailed analysis elucidates the aesthetic and practical considerations of military architecture ensuring the work is both a literary journey and a scholarly treatise on the subject. Thompson's in-depth research and passion for the subject matter are evident in the clear analysis and comprehensive overview provided making the complex subject accessible to students and scholars alike. Recommended for enthusiasts of medieval history architecture and military strategy. Military Architecture in England During the Middle Ages stands as an authoritative source in its niche. The book invites not only appreciation of the structural artistry of these edifices but also contemplation of their significance in England's historical landscape. Thompson's synthesis of academic rigour and captivating narrative makes this essential reading for those who seek to understand the full scope of English medieval fortifications' role within the broader context of medieval society and warfare.

Paperbound Books in Print, 1969 England in the Middle Ages John David Griffith Davies, Frederick Roberts Worts, 1928 The Gateway to the Middle Ages: France & Britain Eleanor Shipley Duckett, VOLUME ONE is the story of the struggle to defend Italian lands against the Eastern Goths and the wave of barbarians from the North. Theodoric the Great dreams of a Roman Empire reinvigorated with Gothic blood while the imprisoned Boethius last of the Roman philosophers and first of the Scholastics writes his immortal work of suffering and consolation. VOLUME TWO portrays an age when men lived intensely aware of supernatural forces and their savage deeds were countered by the civilizing force of Christianity. Gregory of Tours frets for his little world of Gaul while Fortunatus writes poetry of love sacred and secular. Here are St Radegund the queen who lived as a nun Gildas last of the British Romans and St Alban Britain's first martyr. VOLUME THREE is a glowing description of monasticism as it developed under such figures as Columban the Saint afire with Irish enthusiasm St Benedict greatest of the monks who established a pattern of the religious life still in existence and St Gregory greatest of the popes who more than any other man prepared the See of Rome for its triumphant emergence in the Middle Ages.
