Clinical Neuroanatomy John Mendoza, Anne Foundas, 2007-12-26 A major focus of clinical neuropsychology and cognitive behavioral neurology is the assessment and management of cognitive and behavioral changes that result from brain injury or disease In most instances the task of the neuropsychologist can be divided into one of two general categories Perhaps the most common is where patients are known to be suffering from identi ed neurological insults such as completed strokes neoplasms major head traumas or other disease processes and the clinician is asked to assess the impact of the resulting brain damage on behavior The second involves differential diagnosis in cases of questionable insults to the central nervous system Examples of the latter might be milder forms of head trauma anoxia and dementia or suspected vascular compromise In either instance understanding the underlying pathology and its consequences depends in large part on an analysis of cognitive and behavioral changes as well as obtaining a good personal and medical history The clinical investigation will typically include assessing problems or changes in personality social and environmental adaptations affect cognition perception as well as sensorimotor skills Regardless of whether one approaches these questions having prior independent con rmation of the pathology versus only a suspicion of pathology a fairly comprehensive knowledge of functional neuroanatomy is considered critical to this process Unfortunately as neuropsychologists we too frequently adopt a corticocentric view of neurological de cits We recognize changes in personality memory or problem solving capacity as suggestive of possible cerebral compromise

Malle, 2002-01-01

The contributors to this volume are linguists psychologists neuroscientists primatologists and anthropologists who share the assumption that language just as mind and brain are products of biological evolution The rise of human language is not viewed as a serendipitous mutation that gave birth to a unique linguistic organ but as a gradual adaptive extension of pre existing mental capacities and brain structures The contributors carefully study brain mechanisms diachronic change language acquisition and the parallels between cognitive and linguistic structures to weave a web of hypotheses and suggestive empirical findings on the origins of language and the connections of language to other human capacities The chapters discuss brain pathways that support linguistic processing origins of specific linguistic features in temporal and hierarchical structures of the mind the possible co evolution of language and the reasoning about mental states and the aspects of language learning that may serve as models of evolutionary change The New Feminine Brain Mona Lisa Schulz, 2013-07-16

Tucker,2007-06-25 In Mind from Body Don Tucker one of the most original thinkers about organic information processing provides a fascinating analysis of how our brains have become what they are today and speculates intriguingly about what they could be tomorrow He presents important research that explains how personal experience creates the emotional and motivational bases of each of our thoughts even though we are usually not aware that it is happening Tucker shows that in exploring how these bodily thought processes still determine how we react to the world and make decisions we can become more rational Punitivity Helmut Kury,Evelyne Shea,2011 Emotional Behavior and Its Disorders Guido Gainotti,1991
