

A classical Greek sculpture depicting four men in a scene of reconciliation or agreement. The man on the far left stands with his arms crossed, looking towards the center. The second man from the left is shown in profile, reaching out with his right hand to shake the hand of the third man. The third man, who is the central figure, is shown from the waist up, facing slightly away from the viewer but towards the second man. He has a long, curly beard and is wearing a draped garment. The fourth man on the far right stands with his hands clasped in front of him, looking on. All four men have beards and are dressed in traditional Greek attire. The background is a simple, textured stone wall.
