

Stirling engine

- The Stirling engine is a heat engine that operates by cyclic compression and expansion of air or other gases at different temperatures
- This process results in a net conversion of heat energy to mechanical work
- The engine is known for its high efficiency and quiet operation compared to traditional internal combustion engines
- Stirling engines are used in various applications, including submarines and renewable energy systems, such as solar power

Practical example: Engines

- The Stirling engine, a type of heat engine, operates through the cyclic compression and expansion of air or other gases at different temperatures
- This process converts thermal energy into mechanical work, notably used in some engine applications
- Unlike internal combustion engines that burn fuel, Stirling engines are fueled by external heat sources, making them more versatile and often more efficient
- They are used in scenarios where quiet operation and lower emissions are crucial, such as in submarines or solar power applications
