Drawn from the extensive database of Guide to Reference this up to date resource provides an annotated list of print and electronic biomedical and health related reference sources including internet resources and digital image collections Readers will find relevant research clinical and consumer health information resources in such areas as Medicine Psychiatry Bioethics Consumer health and health care Pharmacology and pharmaceutical sciences Dentistry Public health Medical jurisprudence International and global health Guide to Reference entries are selected and annotated by an editorial team of top reference librarians and are used internationally as a go to source for identifying information as well as training reference professionals Library staff answering health queries as well as library users undertaking research on their own will find this an invaluable resource From Sex Differences in Neuroscience to a Neuroscience of Sex Differences: New Directions and Perspectives Belinda Pletzer, 2015 This research topic aims to integrate scattered findings on sex differences in neuroscience into a broader theory of how the human brain is shaped by sex and sex hormones in order to cause the great variety of sex differences that are commonly observed It can be assumed that these differences didn't occur arbitrarily but that they rather determined and still determine evolutionary success of individuals and were shaped by the processes of natural and in particular sexual selection Therefore sex differences are not negligible and sex difference research cannot be discriminating against one sex or the other In fact a better understanding of the underlying causes of sex differences has great advantages for both men and women and society as a whole not only in terms of health care but in every aspect of life Gender equality can only work out if it is equally well understood for men and women what their individual resources and needs are Therefore it is of great importance to pave the way for identifying the underlying principles of structural and functional brain organization that cause men and women to act think and feel differently To this end it is of particular interest to identify possible similarities and interrelations between sex differences that did so far stand separately in order to investigate whether they share a common source To understand where a specific sex difference comes from and whether or not it is caused by the same principle as other sex differences it is necessary to explicitly link sex differences in behavior to their neuronal correlates and vice versa link sex differences in brain structure and function to their behavioral outcomes In particular a new understanding of male and female brain functioning may arise from findings on how sex hormones interact with various neurotransmitter systems In the past few years several findings demonstrated that women s behavior is influenced by the sex hormone fluctuations they experience naturally during their menstrual cycle to the extent that sex differences may only be detectable in one cycle phase but not another The study of menstrual cycle dependent effects gives important hints about which sex differences are activational and which are organizational Additionally it only recently came to attention that hormonal contraception may alter a women s mood cognition and behavior as a consequence of changes in brain structure and function The underlying mechanisms are so poorly understood that it is even hard to predict whether hormonal contraception will mask or amplify sex differences in a given task Since the oral hormonal contraceptive pill is meanwhile used by 100 million women worldwide and even by teenagers whose brains are not yet fully developed the question of how the synthetic steroids contained in hormonal contraceptives act on the brain is to be studied hand in hand with naturally occurring sex differences This topic summarizes the current state of the art in sex difference research and gives new perspectives in terms of hypothesis generation an methodology Both are necessary to gain a complete picture of what it is that makes a brain male or female and move towards a neuroscience of sex differences
