

Matthew Reinhart

RULING REPTILES

Dinosaurs were wildly successful land reptiles that dominated the earth for nearly 150 million years. Although the word dinosaur is Greek for "terrible lizard," not all dinosaurs were savage monsters. Many were gentle plant-eaters and timid scavengers.

More closely related to modern-day crocodiles than lizards, these adaptable reptiles came in every shape and size imaginable, from those as small as chickens to the largest animals ever to walk the earth!

Like modern-day birds and reptiles, today's dinosaurs had feathers. Dinosaurs' eggs were in all shapes and sizes. In fact, some of the largest dinosaurs laid egg weighing nearly 200 pounds!

Everything we know about dinosaurs comes from fossils—bones or other remains that are trapped and preserved in rock. It is said that dinosaurs, including birds, eggs, footprints, and even feathers, got so close to how dinosaurs looked, lived, and died. Dinosaurs' fossils have been discovered on every continent of the world, even in the frozen wastelands of Antarctica.

We all make mistakes, paleontologists included! Sometimes, we rethink our ideas about dinosaurs and their habits as more complete fossils are discovered. Dinosaurs were originally thought to be slow-moving lizards, but in the last century we've learned they were actually fast and intelligent creatures.

DINOSAUR DETECTIVES

Paleontologists find bones like this all over the world of ancient animals. By examining fossil remains, paleontologists are able to discover dinosaurs, putting together clues about how certain animals like dinosaurs looked and behaved. It is a tough job, searching bits of greenwork, even more fossils will only a tiny bit of the overall story.
