Global Environmental Politics Jean-Frédéric Morin, Amandine Orsini, Sikina Jinnah, 2020 Global Environmental Politics provides a fully up to date and comprehensive introduction to the most important issues dominating this fast moving field Going beyond the issue of climate change the textbook also introduces students to the pressing issues of desertification trade in hazardous waste biodiversity protection whaling acid rain ozone depletion water consumption and over fishing Importantly the authors pay particular attention to the interactions between environmental politics and other governance issues such as gender trade development health agriculture and security From Copenhagen to Cancun - Driving Forces in the International Climate Regime Ben Witthaus, 2014-04-11 Inhaltsangabe Introduction For more than two decades scientific and political communities have debated whether and how to act on climate change This discussion moved on Today science is very clear about the magnitude of the risks imposed by unmanaged climate change What we are doing is redefining where people could live and if we do that as a world then hundreds of millions of people will move Probably billions will move We are talking about gambling the planet we are talking about a radical change of the way in which human beings could live and where they could live and indeed how many of them With regard to these risks the application of the precautionary principle telling us to better be safe than sorry appears to be imperative and makes traditional cost benefit analysis become obsolete Thus combating global warming has become one of the most important issues facing the world in the 21st century As nobody would be immune from the transformation the planet faces avoiding this gamble should in theory be in the interest of all nations Unfortunately a common response in the scale necessary is hard to organize While the industrialized countries fear the costs of the transformation from a high carbon to a low carbon economy it is the poorest people who are facing a double inequity as they 1 will be hit earliest and hardest by the adverse impacts of climate change and 2 are least responsible for the stock of current concentrations in the atmosphere This inequity consequently leads to a great sense of injustice in developing countries being asked cut emission while knowing that the developed world got rich on high carbon growth Without any doubt the outcome of this is a historical responsibility of industrialized countries to take over leadership in reducing the emissions of greenhouse gases However bearing in mind that by 2050 approximately eight out of nine billion people in the world will be living in developing nations it is impossible to get down to emission levels needed without at the same time covering the developing world as well Against this background international climate protection is a sociopolitical economical and ethical challenge concerning all nations which have to understand that they are a community based on the principle of mutual solidarity The international climate regime is regarded as the main platform to further cooperation between nations in order to succesfully combat global
