

The authors emphasize, however, that knowing the relative positions of the regions, forests, mountains, rivers, and other parts of the region is important. The importance for forest management is that the forest is not a homogeneous unit, but a mosaic of different types of forest. The authors emphasize that the forest is not a homogeneous unit, but a mosaic of different types of forest. The authors emphasize that the forest is not a homogeneous unit, but a mosaic of different types of forest.

There is a large literature on the effects of the environment on the development of children. The literature is divided into two main areas: the effects of the environment on the development of the child's physical and mental health, and the effects of the environment on the child's social and emotional development. The literature on the effects of the environment on the child's physical and mental health is the largest and most well-developed. It includes studies on the effects of air pollution, noise, and radiation on children's health, and on the effects of the environment on children's cognitive and emotional development. The literature on the effects of the environment on the child's social and emotional development is smaller and less well-developed. It includes studies on the effects of the environment on children's social and emotional development, and on the effects of the environment on children's cognitive and emotional development.

According to a recent census of the service members, 27 beds—sheltering patients in treatment—have been removed, called by the Center the "empty rooms." In reality, seven had the beds removed, the equipment and furniture had been moved. The hospital's psychiatric department, already in a bad way, is apparently now the largest empty ward in any of the hospitals of the National Veterans Affairs system. In an earlier correspondence of some other aspect, I had also referred
