

The background of the entire image is a photograph of an ancient Egyptian tomb. The ceiling is painted to look like a golden sky with a large sun disk in the center, surrounded by rays and smaller celestial symbols. The walls are covered in colorful paintings of deceased individuals. On the left and right sides, there are large, stylized figures of a man and a woman, likely the tomb's owners, shown in a dynamic, dancing pose. They are wearing traditional Egyptian clothing. In the center, there is a doorway leading into a darker interior, where a small figure of a person is visible. The overall scene is a well-preserved example of ancient Egyptian art and architecture.

Images explores a puzzling contradiction Despite the multitude of artifacts and texts that have come to us from ancient Egypt much still remains obscure regarding the lives of women Women were from the historical perspective silent but how should this silence be interpreted What was the reality of women's lives behind the standardized images We know that their chief role in society as mothers and anchors of the family was honored and respected although it meant a degree of segregation and in most periods excluded them from public office Nevertheless in law they were the equals of men and they could and did own property which they administered and disposed of themselves Zahi Hawass's book searches for a more realistic picture of women's lives in ancient Egypt As well as reconsidering the evidence from tomb and temple the author draws on unpublished material from his excavations at the workers cemetery at Giza which sheds light on the womenfolk of the workmen who built and maintained the pyramids The text is complemented by lavish illustrations of places and objects many made especially for this book
