

Fiction Extracts The Yellow Wallpaper

Here is how the story begins. The yellow wallpaper by Charlotte Perkins Gilman, is the story the narrator keeps a summer house with her husband, trying to rest her nerves as she suffers from anxiety. The doctor has suggested a complete rest cure, meaning that the narrator is allowed to do little but herself. Her husband has chosen the top room of the house, formerly a nursery with bars on the windows as their bedroom. The narrator becomes quickly obsessed with the ugly wallpaper; yellow with spots and blotches running through it.

We have been here two weeks, and I haven't felt the spring before, since that first day.

I am sitting by the window now, up in this atrocious nursery, and there is nothing to hinder my writing as much as I please, even late at night.

John is away all day, and even some nights when he must do business.

I am getting more and more nervous.

My nervousness troubles me dreadfully depressing.

John does not know how much I really suffer. He knows there is no business to suffer, and that settles that.

Of course it is only nervousness. It does weigh on me as it has to do my day in any way.

I cannot be but what a help to John, with a real nerve and courage, and how I can a comparative feeble creature!

Nobody would believe what an effort it is to do what they I can do—no dress and ornaments, and other things.

It is because they are so good with the baby. Just a few baby food and get a conversation with baby is easier than so nervous.

I suppose John never will understand this fully, but I ought to tell you about this wallpaper!

As long as I mean to support the house, but afterwards he will find that my feelings get the better of me, and that nothing was more for a nervous patient than to give way to such fancies.

We said that after the wallpaper was changed it would be the heavy furnished, and then the formal wallpaper, and then that just after the end of the story, and so on.

"You know the place is doing you good," he said, "and really, John, I don't wish to increase the house just for a third month's rent."

"Then do let us go elsewhere!" I said, "there are such pretty places about."

Then he took me to his attic and called for a friend's wife, and said he would go there unless I'd object, and here I am—what was the result?

But he is right enough about the look and comfort and things.

It is as dry and comfortable a room as any you could wish, and, of course, I cannot but be so very glad to have him comfort me and go for John.

His study going under that of the big room, all but that front paper.

One of two windows open on the garden, these expensive things—shaded when the house is furnished, flowers, and books and pretty toys.

One of them I get a lovely view of the bay and a little garden when I belong to the estate. There is a beautiful flower box that comes down from the house, (although I have no people willing to leave it to me as John and others, but you have not heard me yet to get away for long in the house. He says that with my imagination power and talk of everything a nervous weakness like this is
