Labor Markets in the Global Economy Erich Gundlach, Peter Nunnenkamp, 1997 The strikingly different labor market performance of major industrial countries suggests that neither globalization nor skill biased technological change necessarily result in rising unemployment or declining wages of low skilled workers Rather globalization and technological change cause labor market problems in those economies that fail to adjust sectoral production structures in accordance with their comparative advantages Labor market outcomes in Germany especially when compared with the United States suggest that high unemployment is the price for insufficient wage flexibility However the experience of Japan and the United Kingdom points to missing links in the debate on labor market effects of globalization and skill biased technological change In Japan both unemployment and wage disparities remained low The contrasting experience is provided by the United Kingdom where the rising wage gap did not prevent high unemployment of low skilled workers All major industrial countries have been confronted with fiercer import competition and outsourcing in low skill labor intensive industries But the response to this common challenge has differed remarkably Japan has outperformed its major competitors in restructuring manufacturing employment towards more sophisticated lines of production and in achieving an appropriate pattern of trade specialization Hence structural change is the key to avoid labor market problems in the era of globalization Different labor market outcomes are closely related to differences in the rate of factor accumulation which comprises physical human and technological capital Especially industrial countries currently plagued with high unemployment have little choice but to forego consumption today in order to improve future real incomes and employment opportunities of lowskilled workers Thus successful structural change does not come for free

The Digital Transformation of Labor Anthony Larsson, Robin Teigland, 2019-11-11 Through a series of studies the overarching aim of this book is to investigate if and how the digitalization digital transformation process causes or may cause the autonomy of various labor functions and its impact in creating or stymieing various job opportunities on the labor market This book also seeks to illuminate what actors groups are mostly benefited by the digitalization digital transformation and which actors groups that are put at risk by it This book takes its point of departure from a 2016 OECD report that contends that the impact digitalization has on the future of labor is ambiguous as on the one hand it is suggested that technological change is labor saving but on the other hand it is suggested that digital technologies have not created new jobs on a scale that it replaces old jobs Another 2018 OECD report indicated that digitalization and automation as such does not pose a real risk of destroying any significant number of jobs for the foreseeable future although tasks would by and large change significantly This would affects welfare as most of its revenue stems from taxation and particularly so from the taxation on labor directly or indirectly For this reason this book will set out to explore how the future technological and societal advancements impact labor conditions The book seeks to provide an innovative enriching and controversial take on how various aspects of the labor market can be and are affected the ongoing digitalization trend in a way that is not covered by extant literature As such this book intends to cater to a wider readership from a general audience and students to specialized professionals and academics wanting to gain a deeper understanding of the possible future developments of the labor market in light of an accelerating digitalization digital transformation of society at large
