Digital Methods and Remote Sensing in Archaeology Maurizio Forte, Stefano Campana, 2017-02-10 This volume debuts the new scope of Remote Sensing which was first defined as the analysis of data collected by sensors that were not in physical contact with the objects under investigation using cameras scanners and radar systems operating from spaceborne or airborne platforms A wider characterization is now possible Remote Sensing can be any non destructive approach to viewing the buried and nominally invisible evidence of past activity Spaceborne and airborne sensors now supplemented by laser scanning are united using ground based geophysical instruments and undersea remote sensing as well as other non invasive techniques such as surface collection or field walking survey Now any method that enables observation of evidence on or beneath the surface of the earth without impact on the surviving stratigraphy is legitimately within the realm of Remote Sensing The new interfaces and senses engaged in Remote Sensing appear throughout the book On a philosophical level this is about the landscapes and built environments that reveal history through place and time It is about new perspectives the views of history possible with Remote Sensing and fostered in part by immersive interactive 3D and 4D environments discussed in this volume These perspectives are both the result and the implementation of technological cultural and epistemological advances in record keeping interpretation and conceptualization Methodology presented here builds on the current ease and speed in collecting data sets on the scale of the object site locality and landscape As this volume shows many disciplines surrounding archaeology and related cultural studies are currently involved in Remote Sensing and its relevance will only increase as the methodology expands

The Iron Age in

Northern Britain Dennis W. Harding, 2017-02-24 The Iron Age in Northern Britain examines the archaeological evidence for earlier Iron Age communities from the southern Pennines to the Northern and Western Isles and the impact of Roman expansion on local populations through to the emergence of historically recorded communities in the post Roman period The text has been comprehensively revised and expanded to include new discoveries and to take account of advanced techniques with many new and updated illustrations The volume presents a comprehensive picture of the long Iron Age allowing readers to appreciate how perceptions of Iron Age societies have changed significantly in recent years New material in this second edition also addresses the key issues of social reconstruction gender and identity as well as assessing the impact of developer funded archaeology on the discipline Drawing on recent excavation and research and interpreting evidence from key studies across Scotland and northern England The Iron Age in Northern Britain continues to be an accessible and authoritative study of later prehistory in the region

Maritime Archaeology on Dry Land Richard Bradley, 2022-05-19 This book is about two islands off the coast of Continental Europe the seas that surrounded them and the ways in which they were used over a period of three thousand years Instead of the usual emphasis on finds in the intertidal zone it focuses on parts of Britain and Ireland where traces of the prehistoric shoreline survive above sea level It explores a series of Neolithic and Early Bronze Age sites which were investigated in the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries and have been largely forgotten These places were very different from the Iron Age ports and harbors studied in recent years How can we identify these special sites and what are the best ways of interpreting them The book considers the evidence for travel by sea between the settlement of the earliest farmers and the long distance movement of metalwork It emphasizes the distinctive archaeology of a series of coastal locations Little of the information is familiar and some of the most useful evidence was recorded many years ago It is supplemented by new studies of these places and the artifacts found there as well as reconstructions of the prehistoric coastline The book emphasizes the important role of enclosed estuaries which were both sheltered harbors and special places where artifacts were introduced by sea Other items were made there and exchanged with local communities It considers the role played by these places in the wider pattern of settlement and their relationship to major monuments The book describes how the character of coastal sites changed in parallel with developments in maritime technology and trade The main emphasis is on Neolithic and Early Bronze Ages uses of the seashore but the archaeology of the Middle and Later Bronze Age provides a source of comparison

The Cleaven Dyke and Littleour Gordon Barclay, Gordon S. Maxwell, 1998

Cleaven Dyke was for some centuries identified as a Roman construction However the authors surveys and excavations strongly suggest that it was built as part of the Neolithic cursus monument tradition The volume presents the comprehensive results of their study showing in detail the segmented nature of the Dyke s construction its alignment and the palaeoenvironmental evidence for the surrounding landscape In addition the nearby recitlinear timber enclosure of Littleour is also described

Glasgow Andrew Gibb,2021-06-29 Originally published in 1983 this book sets the phases and elements of Glasgow s townscape evolution in their historical framework from the medieval period when Glasgow was a small but important burgh to the growth of the town thanks to its command of the transatlantic tobacco trade in the 18th Century Examining the solid growth which came with the textile phase of the industrial revolution and subsequent pioneering achievements in ship building and marine engineering the book also charts the subsequent collapse of the industrial base and attempts at urban renewal on a massive scale

British Pottery: The First 3000 Years Alex Gibson,2024-12-15 First comprehensive account of the sequence development and use of early prehistoric pottery in over 20 years Pottery was at the heart of the Neolithic package appearing in Britain with the first farmers around 4000 BC It arrived as a mature technology and was essential to the new largely sedentary lifestyle and economy It transformed storage and cooking practices and the earliest ceramics seem to have been essential equipment in the new practice of dairying The pottery changed over time and as a result ceramics have been fundamental to the construction of relative chronologies since the early days of modern archaeology Even with the development of absolute dating techniques the role of pottery as a dating tool has not diminished but instead has become refined and more accurate But pottery is not just a tool for dating the past it also represents a facet of prehistoric art and expression Starting simply ceramics became arguably the main medium for display with often complex designs Simple techniques motifs and panels are combined to create highly decorated vessels often of great individuality The use of inlays pastes and slips added contrasting colours to these vibrant designs By the end of the Neolithic ceramics became one of the major grave goods of British prehistory acting as accompaniments to those that warranted formal burial whether by inhumation or cremation This practice continued throughout the Early Bronze Age to the extents that lacking contemporary domestic sites most of the corpora of Early Bronze Age ceramics are largely sepulchral in context As we increasingly realise that burial rituals may have been varied and complex so the roles of these ceramics are becoming all the more questioned This book traces the 3000 years of ceramic use and development in Britain charting the changing forms and decorative techniques and the differing and changing roles that pottery played within its contemporary society
