

An oval-shaped illustration of a two-story wooden building, likely a saloon or dance hall, with a balcony and many people gathered outside. The building has a prominent balcony on the second floor with a railing. The ground floor is open, and a large group of people, including men, women, and children, are gathered in front of the building. Some are standing, while others are sitting on the ground. The scene is set in a town with other buildings visible in the background. The illustration is in a sepia or brownish tone, typical of old postcards.

American Literature and Science Robert Scholnick, 2021-10-21 Literature and science are two disciplines are two disciplines often thought to be unrelated if not actually antagonistic But Robert J Scholnick points out that these areas of learning up through the beginning of the nineteenth century were understood as parts of a unitary endeavor By mid century they had diverged but literature and science have continued to interact conflict and illuminate each other In this innovative work twelve leaders in this emerging interdisciplinary field explore the long engagement of American writers with science and uncover science's conflicting meanings as a central dimension of the nation's conception of itself Reaching back to the Puritan poet minister physician Edward Taylor who wrote at the beginning of the scientific revolution and forward to Thomas Pynchon novelist of the cybernetic age this collection of original essays contains essential work on major writers including Franklin Jefferson Poe Emerson Thoreau Twain Hart Crane Dos Passos and Charles Olson Through its exploration of the ways that American writers have found in science and technology a vital imaginative stimulus even while resisting their destructive applications this book points towards a reconciliation and integration within culture An innovative look at a neglected dimension of our literary tradition American Literature and Science stands as both a definition of the field and an invitation to others to continue and extend new modes of inquiry
