Bowman,2013-10-01 Graduate School is a memoir about an older person returning to school It is about new beginnings changing a way of living and adventurously pursuing a life passion by studying philosophy It is about the struggle to get into graduate school the challenges of learning again the excitement of a fresh start in life and the happiness derived from studying the ancient philosophy of Stoicism This is also a book about higher education in America today written through the lens of one who had experienced much of life who has navigated the rough and tumble real world and entered an academic surreal world This memoir evaluates controversial topics like feminism socialism and liberal academic biases based on experience In many ways academia is an idealistic make believe cocoon This book is also about those that inhabitant this world It describes professors with liberal agendas professors struggling to inculcate learning and idealistic professors endeavoring to impart knowledge It is also about the college students and those who live at the periphery of academia Foremost this book is about ideas It describes a student s descent into the philosophies of free will determinism art and morality theories of the mind Stoicism and ancient history A few redacted papers are included to illustrate the author s ignorance issues in graduate school and difficult ideas and concepts to master One paper for example compares the decline of Ancient Rome with the decline of America today While this book offers insights into many facets of graduate school the central topic is how to achieve happiness in life Some of its most important messages are that it is never too late to learn that we compete against ourselves and not others and to always live life to its fullest aim further than your reach and live life now because it is all we have
