Fostering Gender-Transformative Change in Sustainable Forest Management : A Case Study of DGM Saweto Peru (English) Ezgi Canpolat, Meerim Shakirova, Vince McElhinny, Kame Westerman, Alli Cruz, Theresa Buppert, 2022-03-10 The DGM Saweto Peru country project focuses on supporting Indigenous peoples in selected communities in the Peruvian Amazon to improve their sustainable forest management practices The project started its implementation in November 2015 and closed in June 2021 it has had 133 subprojects which were all completed This case study focuses on one of those subprojects to offer insight into whether and in what way it influenced women s participation and leadership on the ground It could also indicate the extent to which the subproject may be influencing broader social and gender norms in Peru It also informs the wider line of inquiry of the DGM Gender Study which seeks to analyze the contribution of the DGM project to women s economic achievement access to and control over productive assets voice and agency that supported positive changes in women s leadership and meaningful participation Our conceptual framework for this study both the broader DGM Gender Study and this more focused case study follows a stepwise yet flexible and dynamic progression toward gender transformative change The framework begins by assessing the inputs that the DGM project provided to beneficiaries such as assets information skills and capacity building This assessment looks at what type of inputs were provided to whom and how We assess how those inputs influenced women s income and assets and building on that how women are gaining voice and agency We assess whether and how those

changes in voice and agency are influencing gender norms attitudes and perceptions of women and men at multiple levels from individual to household to community Finally we look at whether those shifts have the potential to be sustained beyond the lifetime of the project and could influence more formal practices rules policies and laws that are unequal to women In this case study which focuses on improving fish farming in the native Awaj n community of Nazareth in Amazonas female and male community members report some benefits and positive shifts for women at the individual level but only limited benefits at the household and community level The results suggest that the DGM Saweto Peru fish farming subproject brought some tangible positive changes for women but leave in doubt the extent to which those changes have extended beyond the direct subproject participants

Men, Masculinities and Disaster Elaine Enarson, Bob Pease, 2016-06-17 In the examination of gender as a driving force in disasters too little attention has been paid to how women s or men s disaster experiences relate to the wider context of gender inequality or how gender just practice can help prevent disasters or address climate change at a structural level With a foreword from Kenneth Hewitt an afterword from Raewyn Connell and contributions from renowned international experts this book helps address the gap It explores disasters in diverse environmental hazard political and cultural contexts through original research and theoretical reflection building on the under utilized orientation of critical men s studies This body of thought not previously applied in disaster contexts explores how men gain maintain and use power to assert control over women Contributing authors examine the gender terrain of disasters through men s eyes considering how diverse forms of masculinities shape men s efforts to respond to and recover from disasters and other climate challenges The book highlights both the high costs paid by many men in disasters and the consequences of dominant masculinity practices for women and marginalized men It concludes by examining how disaster risk can be reduced through men s diverse efforts to challenge hierarchies around gender sexuality disability age and culture Gender & Development Mr. Rohit Manglik,2024-04-20

White women who inhabited the West Indies in the eighteenth century fascinated metropolitan observers In popular prints novels and serial publications these women appeared to stray from proper British societal norms Although many women who lived in the Caribbean island of Jamaica might have fit the model extant writings from Ann Brodbelt Sarah Dwarries Margaret and Mary Cowper Lady Maria Nugent and Ann Appleton Storrow show a longing to remain connected with metropolitan society and their loved ones separated by the Atlantic Sensibility and awareness of metropolitan material culture masked a lack of empathy towards subordinates and opened the white women in these islands to censure Novels and popular publications portrayed white women in the Caribbean as prone to overconsumption but these women seem to prize items not for their inherent value They treasured items most when they came from beloved connections This colonial interchange forged and preserved bonds with loved ones and comforted the women in the West Indies during their residence in these sugar plantation islands This book seeks to complicate the stereotype of insensibility and overconsumption that characterized the perception of white women who inhabited the British West Indies in the long eighteenth century This book will appeal to students and researchers alike who are interested in the social and cultural history of British Jamaica and the British West Indies more generally Jamaica Ladies Christine Walker, 2020-04-17 Jamaica Ladies is the first systematic study of the free and freed women of European Euro African and African descent who perpetuated chattel slavery and reaped its profits in the British Empire Their actions helped transform Jamaica into the wealthiest slaveholding colony in the Anglo Atlantic world Starting in the 1670s a surprisingly large and diverse group of women helped secure English control of Jamaica and crucially aided its developing and expanding slave labor regime by acquiring enslaved men women and children to protect their own tenuous claims to status and independence Female colonists employed slaveholding as a means of advancing themselves socially and financially on the island By owning others they wielded forms of legal social economic and cultural authority not available to them in Britain In addition slaveholding allowed free women of African descent who were not far removed from slavery themselves to cultivate perform and cement their free status Alongside their male counterparts women bought sold stole and punished the people they claimed as property and vociferously defended their rights to do so As slavery's beneficiaries these women worked to stabilize and propel this brutal labor regime from its inception Gender at Work in Economic Life Gracia Clark, 2003 This new volume from SEA illuminates the importance of gender as a frame of reference in the study of economic life The contributors are economic anthropologists who consider the role of gender and work in a cross cultural context examining issues of historical change the construction of globalization household authority and entitlement and entrepreneurship and autonomy The book will be a valuable resource for researchers in anthropology and in the related fields of economics sociology of work gender studies women s studies and economic development Published in cooperation with the Society for Economic Anthropology Visit their web page Securing sustainable small-scale fisheries: sharing good practices from around the world Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations,2019-02-26 This document includes eight studies showcasing good practices in support of sustainable small scale fisheries FAO commissioned these studies aiming to share experiences and promote the implementation of the Voluntary Guidelines for Securing Sustainable Small Scale Fisheries in the Context of Food Security and Poverty Eradication SSF Guidelines The case studies were also intended to promote participatory approaches in line with the SSF Guidelines principles and to promote increased interaction between research and fishing communities including the use of traditional knowledge and participatory research It is hoped that the case studies will inform policy and policy processes and in this way promote sustainable small scale fisheries according to the SSF Guidelines and the human rights based approach to development HRBA The case studies constitute a rich selection of experiences and are diverse not only with regard to their geographical setting but also in scope and approach They span from looking at one specific tool for sharing experiences the fisheries learning exchanges methodology in Madagascar and Mozambique or examining the enabling environment in a specific thematic area disaster risks in Bangladesh to regional policy formulation on small scale fisheries the SSF Guidelines protocol for Caribbean policies and reflection on how to use the SSF Guidelines in participatory processes the Myanmar step by step approach to discussions with small scale fisheries communities A few of the papers look at co management in some cases combining fisheries management and social development Senegal Uruguay and Nepal with one focusing on the role of small scale fisheries and community organizations India Generally the case studies refer to HRBA but perhaps because many of the activities have taken place in the past it seems that HRBA has rarely been consciously and explicitly implemented Still the case studies bear witness to a number of experiences and practices that are clearly steps in the right direction Key good practices emerging from the studies refer to among other things holistic approaches to co management and social responsibility broad engagement inclusiveness and partnerships the power of communication and gender equality and the role of women As more experience is gained our knowledge of how to go about implementing the SSF Guidelines will improve and nurture new and continued initiatives For the present and the future efforts should be made to apply HRBA while continuing to share experiences and good practices showing how to do so when implementing the SSF Guidelines

Opposing Currents Vivienne Bennett,Sonia Dávila-Poblete,María Nieves Rico,2005-01-15 In every part of the world looming or full blown water crises threaten communities from the largest cities to the smallest rural towns Over the past two decades there has been increased attention at the global level to the devastating effects of water shortages and pollution and policies and principles for implementing the sustainable management of water resources have proliferated But scholars and activists are beginning to understand that top down environmental policies are doomed to fail if they do not address local cultures and customary uses As the contributors to Opposing Currents illustrate that failure is most evident in the inability to recognize that women not only should become central to water management at the local level but that in fact they already are This volume focuses on women in Latin America as stakeholders in water resources management It makes their contributions to grassroots efforts more visible explains why doing so is essential for effective public policy and planning in the water sector and provides guidelines for future planning and project implementation After an in depth review of gender and water management policies and issues in relation to domestic usage irrigation and sustainable development the book provides a series of case studies prepared by an interdisciplinary group of scholars and activists Covering countries throughout the hemisphere and moving freely from impoverished neighborhoods to the conference rooms of international agencies the book explores the various ways in which women are and are not involved in local water initiatives across Latin America Insightful analyses reveal what these case studies imply for the success or failure of various regional efforts to improve water accessibility and usability and suggest new ways of thinking about gender and the environment in the context of specific policies and practices
